Wording of stamp of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association

Facsimile of stamp of Philadelphia Association of Manufacturers' Representatives

This Experiment Would Convince You

If you want an object lesson as to the strength and standing of the above stamps, compare the way your jobber treats a specialty order with one of those stamps on it, with the way he treats one without a stamp on it.

He will usually be several times as prompt and willing to fill the stamped order, because he is protected in it; just as you are protected. The stamp means something to everybody in the transaction. To the manufacturer it means an added obligation to employ only reliable salesmen; to the salesman it means an added impulse to be fair and square in getting and filling the order; to the jobber it means a guarantee that the order is bona fide; to you it means the certainty that you are dealing with the right kind of people.

An Idea for Coffee Advertising

¶ The grocer who specializes in Harisco Standardized Coffees, will not only hold his trade, but he has a strong and appealing talking point which he can advertise and get more trade.

¶ We are increasing our business talking and advertising uniform coffee, and so can he. Everybody, dealer and consumer, is interested in a plan of keeping coffees standard and uniform, so that the buyer can know that the grades he has settled down on, he can get again and again.

¶ Harisco Standardized Coffees include all grades, low as well as high-priced, but nothing so low that we cannot keep it absolutely uniform from one's year end to another.

¶ The only standard we have for coffee—and the only one you should have—is kup kwality.

The merchant who sets himself against nationally advertised goods, sets himself against his customers, for his customers want nationally advertised goods. He sets himself also against his own interest, for it is far cheaper and more profitable for him to take advantage of the demand created by the manufacturer's advertising, than to try and fight that demand.

Getting Back at Women Who Criticise Grocery Prices

A Clever, Striking Exposition of the Reason Groeery Priees Are Higher Than They Ought to Be. Customers Who Expeet Many Aeeommodations at the Dealer's Expense.

One of the best expositions I ever saw of the reason grocery prices are higher than some people think they ought to be, was published in the "Daily Echo" of Halifax, N. S., a few days ago, from the pen of a Halifax retail grocer named Joseph Woods. A day or so before this one Ella M. Paint, president of the Halifax Household League, had had a letter printed in the same paper calling local retail grocery prices "disgraceful," and asking the following question:—

> Will you help to prevail upon the Board of Control to tell us why butter can be bought in Yarmouth in the retail stores at 20 and 22 cents per pound; in Halifax it sells from 34 cents up? Eggs from Yarmouth to Berwick bring 25 cents per dozen; in Halifax 60 cents per dozen.

After thinking over this for a day or so Mr. Woods produced the following:—

How do the president and members of the Household League buy their groceries? Let us see; Mrs. S. phones her grocer at, say, 9 A. M.

"Please send me half a pound of tea, three pounds of flour, one yeast cake, and send them at once, please, as I want to use the flour right away." * * * Grocer sends Mrs. S.'s order out in an hour or so, along with several other orders.

At 10 o'clock * * * Mrs. S. rings up again:—

"Hello, has my order left yet? Yes. Too bad; oh, my, send me as soon as you can one small tin of baking powder, please, also a half pound of cheese."

Driver gets back and is hustled off to Mrs. S. at once with second order, along with other orders which have come in, in the meantime.

12.30, telephone rings: "Hello, this is Mrs. S. speaking. I am sorry, but I forgot to order butter. Please send me a half pound. I would like to have it for lunch."

* * * Driver delivers butter in due course, for lunch.

2 P. M. Mrs. S. rings up: "Send me a head of lettuce and small bottle of salad dressing; any time will do."

5 P. M. Mrs. S. rings up again: "Send me two pounds of sugar with the other things." * * * (which, by the way, have left.) However, when the driver gets back, out he goes to Mrs. S with sugar.

Grocer made five trips to Mrs. S's where one would have done. * * * Mrs. S. phoned five times when once would have done. Who pays for this? Who should pay? Is the grocer at fault? The point is this:—

Mrs. S. should have phoned her order all at one time, and instead of ordering a half pound of tea, three pounds of flour, small tin of baking powder and two pounds of sugar, she should have ordered about as follows: two pounds tea, bag or half barrel of flour, large tin of baking powder, ten or fifteen pounds of sugar, and so on in like quantities, according to size of family. Then Mrs. S. would only telephone about three times per week instead of about thirty times per week.

Now to go further: Mrs. S.'s bill amounts to, say, $20 for month of June (and along with hers there are a few hundred more than $30 accounts), but how many of these accounts will be marked "Paid in Full" by July 15th or 31st, or even August 31st?

What a perfectly unanswerable argument this is! Every grocer knows that dozens of women buy in just this way. They expect all sorts of accommodations, of course at somebody else's expense. The grocer is right to charge a customer for everything he delivers, whether it is merchandise or accommodation. But it is quite likely that the customer will never willingly pay an adequate price for the accommodation and perhaps the Economy stores are right in declining to give these accommodations; in other words, in making the customer do without them and save the money that they cost.

Pineapple Window Dressing Contest Ends With Over Two Hundred Prize Winners.

Campaign to Exploit Hawaiian Pineapple Ends With One First Prize, Three Second Prizes, Twelve Third Prizes, Thirty Fourth Prizes, One Hundred and Fifty Fifth Prizes and Several Hundred Five Dollar Prizes. Several Pennsylvanians Among the Winners.

The window display contest which has been conducted by the association of Hawaiian Pineapple Packers during the past two months and which has recently come to a close, was one of the most successful on record. Late in the summer the association offered over a thousand prizes in sums ranging from $5 to $500 for the best displays of Hawaiian canned pineapple during the fall. The number of photographs of attractive and interesting displays received by the association was beyond expectations.

This contest was one of the notable features of a campaign intended to stimulate interest in Hawaiian canned pineapple, and judging by reports from the trade, it has greatly widened the market for this delicious canned fruit. Retailers are growing more enthusiastic every day over the possibilities of such a fruit, which can be suitably utilized in so many different menus.

Some of the lucky prize winners are listed below. This list omits the names of several hundred winners of $5 prizes, which was the smallest amount awarded in the contest.

Federal Trade Commission Will Try to Stop Unfair Competition Without Prosecuting Offenders

Chairman Tells of Cases in Which Simple Intimation to the Offenders Produced Results Without Legal Proceedings. What Unfair Competition Is.

In a recent address by Joseph E. Davies, chairman of the new Federal Trade Commission, he said some interesting things indicating what the Commission would probably consider "unfair competition" under the new Federal Trade Commission Act, which forbids unfair competition and then creates the Federal Trade Commission to say what unfair competition is.

From a copy of this address which has been sent to this paper, we take the following:—

The principal functions for which the Federal Trade Commission was created was undoubtedly to prevent practices of unfair competition in industry. The object was to destroy monopoly in the seed, and to protect the great majority of business units in industry, whose chief menace comes from practices of unfair competition which might be employed by not a more efficient, but by a more powerful rival. Complaints covering many varieties of unfair methods have been filed with the Commission, such as false advertising, bogus independents, price discrimination, bribery of employees, boycotts, misbranding of goods, rebates and the like. These complaints have come from all classes of industry, covering the fields of mining, agriculture, manufacture and distribution. Of these complaints and their disposition, the public has not heard much. This is so because of two conditions which the Federal Trade Commission has imposed upon its procedure, for the public interest. No information is given out, or is obtainable upon any application for a complaint which is made to the Federal Trade Commission until the case has been investigated and until it has been determined that a formal complaint is to be served by the Commission against the parties complained of. The reasons for this are, first, to protect those who in good faith make the complaint from reprisals by those against whom the charges are made; and, second, to protect legitimate business from the injury which the publication of malicious or improper applications or complaints might subject them to.

The other policy which has been adopted is that of advising the party complained against of the nature and character of the charges made before formal complaint is made and filed by the Commission, to the end that either the party complained of may establish the lack of public interest or be given an opportunity, if the situation is clear, to agree that neither as to the complainant nor as to the general public will there be a continuance of such illegal practice. These policies tend to obscure the amount of work done by the Commission, so far as the publicity of its work is concerned, but it has been felt that a larger service was being performed by the proper protection of legitimate interests of business and by the speedy accomplishment of the relief to the general public and to the parties complained of.

A corporation engaged in the business of selling typewriters circulated among dealers in many cities a letter falsely stating that a competitor had moved its factory from Chicago, and that the customers of such factory would be compelled to make new arrangements for obtaining typewriters, which need the advertising corporation was prepared to fill. A letter directed to the corporation complained of resulted in a retraction, and in the circulation of such retraction extensively and the applicant for a complaint thereupon requested the dismissal of the matter.

In still another case, a corporation engaged in the manufacture of an article, published advertisements in which were statements disparaging the goods of a competitor in an improper way. The practice was called to the attention of the Commission, with the result that it was immediately discontinued.

Recently complaint was made by one of the large so-called independents against an allowed price-discrimination practice indulged in by a larger competitive rival. Upon complaint being made by the Commission with the larger competitor, the assurance was voluntarily given that the practice would be discontinued, not only as to the party complaining, but also as a general practice, and as to all persons in the trade. Thus it happens that the relief which the Commission could give, to wit, the procurement of the stopping of the practice, is secured with immediate relief to those injured, instead of going through a long process of litigation and procedure that might involve months, or possibly years, for its final determination.

It is contemplated that by the publication of a ruling upon each case, as it is disposed of, that ultimately a body of cases will be built up which will operate as a code of what establishes fairness and unfairness in trade, to the benefit of industry in this situation where formal complaints do not come to trial.

Norwegian Sardines Now Under Embargo. Horse Meat Scheme Not Expected to Affect Meat Market. Macy & Co. Fighting Stevens Bill. Various Items and Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York December 31, 1915.

The trade were greatly concerned to receive information during the week that sardines preserved in oil had been added to products, the exportation of which from Norway has been prohibited by the government. Practically all sardines produced and packed in Norway are packed in oil, so that this embargo, if persisted in, will mean the stopping of all supplies of Norway sardines. The news appeared to be authentic, having appeared in a cablegram from the American Consul-General at Christiana, Norway, to the State Department at Washington, under date of December 22d. None of the trade here apear to know very much about it, but they all agree that if authentic, it will eliminate what has become the chief source of supply of foreign sardines since the war.

The trade are not greatly interested in the plan to sell fresh horse meat in this city. The plan has been tried within a few miles of New York City—over in New Jersey—without affecting the meat market very much. As everybody knows, there is an enormous foreign population in this city, and it seems to be generally expected that a considerable demand for horse meat would appear as soon as it was put on sale under proper restrictions. That this would affect the market for beef and other meats, however, is unlikely, for the reason that the class of trade who would eat horse meat do not buy the good grades of other meats.

The Week's One-Time Ads.

I suppose that every man in the grocery business is willing to admit that coffee is one of the hardest things to talk that there is. That's because there's such a mighty few things you can say about coffee. After you've talked about its flavor, that lets you out, and you can't talk about flavor in more than eleven different ways. I think that the advertising done for coffee by grocers is the limit—there's not a thing in it that hasn't been said before a thousand times and will be said again.

What's needed to make a hit with coffee is a talking point. I've got it. It's to put in the Master Coffee Cutter and Refiner and steel cut your coffee instead of grindi it. Coffee that is steel cut is a d ferent proposition from coff ground and all smashed up like t average coffee mill does it. Co them up side by side and see. you fellows who are in the mark for a coffee mill will put in t Master you will have a steel c talking point for your coffee for t rest of your life. Cut a pound wi the Master and grind a pound wi an ordinary mill. Put them side side in your window with the rig kind of signs on and get ready sell coffee. Are You in Doubt?

If in doubt what baking powder to tie to, to feature and to establish as your leader, decide on Rumford. Why? Because it satisfies more people than any other type of baking powder made.

Rumford powder is a real phosphate powder, ideal from every standpoint—from the health standpoint, from the leavening standpoint.

Something more you will not be displeased to hear—it probably pays a better profit than any other good baking powder on the market.

And there is no better, steadier seller anywhere.

WITH THE EDITOR

Several months ago the United States Department of Agriculture began to investigate the reason why retail prices of fruits and produce were so much higher than the best price that the producer could get. There was a lot of talk about the retailer's profit, led really by the Government agents. I predicted at the time that when the Government got into it, it would find that retail prices of fruits and produce had to be high because of the extreme perishability of the products, and because of the waste over which the retailer had but limited control. Obviously a retailer who buys a crate of cantaloupes, half of which spoil on his hands, must get his money out of the other half if he can. This is a plain economic necessity, and anybody who denies it is an ignorant ass.

A Changed Attitude Toward Retailers' Profits.

From a summary of the results of the Government's investigation, it seems that my prediction has been fulfilled. The report is too long to reproduce, but I pick out these occasional expressions, showing that the trend is no longer to blame high prices on the retailer alone:—

The present abundance of fresh vegetables and fruits brings with it the perennial necessity for their rapid, economical distribution and for encouraging a generous and steady consumption. The machinery for moving these food products is complex, and retail dealers are often accused of not following closely the wholesale market quotations; that in times of glutted markets they do not cut prices severely and aid in a rapid movement from producer to consumer. But the responsibility for slow and uneconomic movement into consumptive channels is difficult to trace.

The large class of food distributors known as the "middlemen" are often accused of levying, arbitrarily, a heavy tribute on all foodstuffs passing from the producer to the consumer. The attention of the public has been frequently directed to increased costs of products rather than service rendered.

The United States Department of Agriculture does not indict the "middlemen" as a class, although it points out some of their abuses in the trade. As a matter of fact, say the Department's specialists, when discussing the present marketing organization, economic laws would not permit the long-continued existence of a marketing agency which was solely a parasite.

Several important factors have contributed to the establishment of many middlemen as necessary agents in the present system of marketing. Production during the last decade has increased greatly, and improved methods and facilities for handling the increase have been introduced. Keeping pace with increased production has come the demand of consumers for more elaborate and efficient service. Seldom is the fact considered that service can become a very expensive luxury.

With the perishable nature of a large part of the fruits and vegetables marketed there must be some loss. This often totals higher than the farmer realizes. For instance, according to the Department's market specialists, the loss on such commodities as strawberries, peaches and grapes sometimes amounts to 30 or 40 per cent. before they reach the hands of the retail trade. Losses due to spoiling may be the result of the shippers sending overripe fruit or diseased fruit, or failing to give proper attention to packing, to loading or to bracing the packages in the car. Delay in transit, improper ventilation or refrigeration, or unnecessary rough handling of cars may contribute to rapid deterioration of the shipment on arrival.

Truly a most remarkable change in tune, but no greater one than I expected would occur, after the Government had found what it was really talking about. This is really a defense of the retail middleman and the prices he is often compelled to charge.

Is there anything about Socialism that prevents a man from earning a living at something else? I have never studied Socialism very deeply, but it certainly has never been my impression that it taught anything derogatory of honest labor.

Can't a Socialist Be a Good Business Man?

Yet I have known of several cases in which Socialism seemed to show itself to be so absorbing as to sap all of a man's ability and inclination to work at an ordinary means of livelihood.

The latest of these cases was brought to my attention only last week by the sight in the street of the man concerned. He is certainly less than fifty years old and has been for probably twenty years an ardent Socialist. By trade he is an expert coffee man and without doubt a good one. He has held some fine positions, and he has been in business for himself, but nothing lasted very long; he has been handicapped everywhere by the fact that the best of his mind was absorbed in Socialism. The coffee business was his living, but he wasn't keenly interested in it, and of course everybody knows what kind of work one does under those conditions.

This man is now out of the coffee business, and is pursuing Socialism exclusively. He was connected with a Socialist paper until it failed. Now, I understand, he is doing odd jobs for Socialism—making speeches once in a while, selling books—anything. As a business man it is not unfair to say that he has been a comparative failure. The coffee business, like other businesses, is a hard master and will not long endure divided loyalty. Of course, he has been a good Socialist, which is a worthy accomplishment as far as it goes.

Men are good Republicans and good Democrats, and at the same time are good business men. Is there any reason why it should be impossible for the Socialist to be a good business man?

Worth Reading and Remembering

No. 6.

The best advertising is "mouth to mouth." Treat your customers so that they will tell their friends about you and advise them to deal with you.

If you advertise bargains, emphasize price. If you advertise regular goods at regular prices, talk quality.

Always emphasize service, mentioning careful attention customers get from your employees, prompt delivery of goods purchased, freedom from mistakes, etc.

Be specific. Tell why your goods are good. Truth and simplicity will attract people quicker than so-called originality.

A firm of valued subscribe Pennegar Bros., of Hyattsvi Md., send in newspaper adv tisement, acr which they ha pasted a typewritten slip: "Do Y Remember the Editorial in Grocery World?" The adverti ment is headed "No Advance Price" and it was published Au ust 26, 1914. Its text is as follo

The Revival of an Old Question.

NO ADVANCE IN PRICE.

We have a stock of importe Olive Oil which has been sellin regularly at a fair and satisfactor profit.

Now comes the war, with its new that there will be no more Olive O until the war is over.

Naturally there is an increase demand for the oil already in t country, but is there any excuse fo advancing the price?

We say there is not.

"We can't replace it at the price" What of it?

When our stock is gone we mu replenish at a higher price, then w can advance our own prices with perfectly good reason.

The editorial, which appea about the same time, took the s attitude that the advertisem takes: that it is not fair to cha an advance merely because buyer's necessities force him to it. All over the country, in early days of the war when tr was excited, were men who their goods bought, and were selling them at a fair profit, who instantly advanced them 2 50—even one hundred per cen why? Because they were wo any more than when first pric Not at all; they did it merely cause the uncertainties and anxie of buyers made them more read stand the pinch. Is that a good r son? From the trader's standpo it is, say the traders. I don't lieve it, and Pennegar Broth don't believe it, and thousands other merchants don't believe it.

The National Cash Register deserves a great deal of credit its recent ad tising campa which certa could not h brought it, in sales, any adeq return. It was the advertisem "Business is Booming," which peared in every leading trade paper in the country as well as in all the principal magazines. Probably the insertion of that single advertisement cost the company $50,000. It was an advertisement for National Cash Registers, but primarily was a loud and influential call to the business world, which is still a little uncertain, that prosperity had at last arrived.

The National Cash Register Co. is particularly in a position to know whether we are prosperous or not, for the average merchant will make the old cash drawer do just as long as times are hard. Only when he has confidence in the future will he buy a cash register.

That business is booming can no longer be doubted. There is more money in Pennsylvania to-day than there has been before in twenty-five years.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

About Pineapple.—A No. 2½ can sliced Hawaiian pineapple can be sold for 15 cents. Many of you no doubt are handling it and pushing it because it makes a fine leader and has proven a dandy seller.

The difference in this grade of fruit and that of the Extra Standard is that some of the slices are broken. The syrup is not heavy and occasionally you will find a hard or pithy slice.

The mistake that you are likely to make in your eagerness to show big sales is in putting it in the Extra Standard class and recommending it to the better trade who do not appreciate the 10 cents a can difference. Understand, the Hawaiian people have done a good thing in putting this package on the market, and it is up to us to give them our support by pushing it in a judicious way. But—let it be a judicious way.

It's the Same with Coffee.—You can sell a good, drinkable coffee for 20 cents and you don't have to put an ounce of Rio in it. But even at that a 20-cent article isn't going to build up a permanent coffee trade.

To be able to discriminate—to be able to size up your customer's coffee taste and tea taste and pineapple taste is the first study of real salesmanship. People are constantly driven away from stores because salesmen haven't the nerve to talk high-grade goods. Don't get the impression that a low price is always the drawing card. Don't run away with the idea that people don't know values. The public is just as well posted as you and remember that the dining room table is the final test.

To be sure, cheap coffee can be made delicious, but it takes an artist to do the trick.

We were invited to have supper recently at a big camp where we supplied the coffee, being the successful bidder. "Is it possible," we exclaimed, and the man of color in a spotless white uniform, answered, "Yaas, sir, that's your goods."

That same coffee if sent to the average home would have tasted simply vile when served.

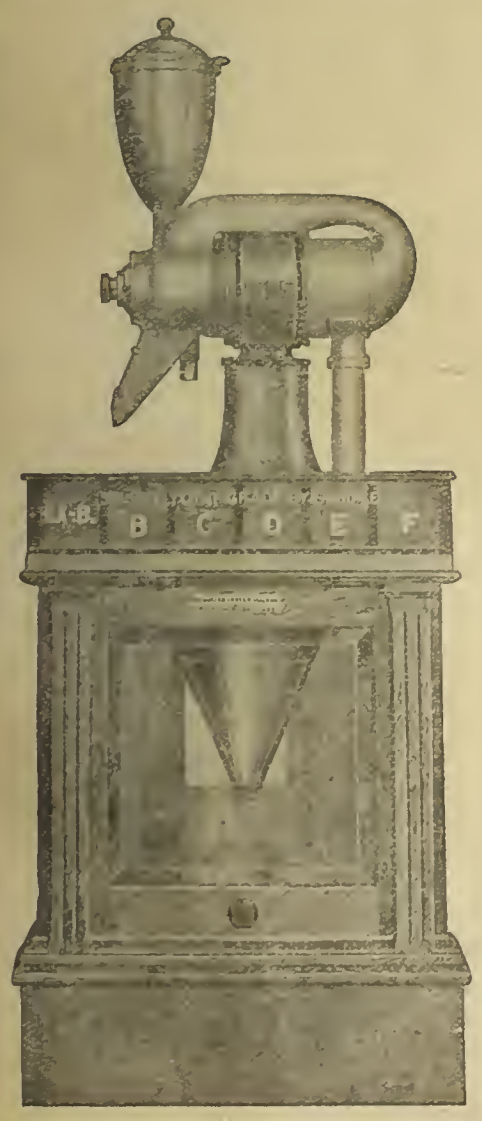
Know your customers, boys, get their ideas of price and let them do a lot of talking about what they think coffee should taste like. Then you have a road to travel on.

Take a cue from some of the clever drummers who come into your store for the first time. Watch how they feel out the boss, say, on a line of rice samples. These men catch every word he says, every comment he makes, until his true ideas about the quality of rice a store should sell have been caught, and then their line of talk is made easy.

Says Premium Coupons in Cartons Are Legal.

The Nebraska Supreme Court, on appeal of a Lincoln grocer, holds the use of premium coupons in food packages are legal. The decision sets aside a former judgment. The court makes a distinction between a premium coupon and a prize package or gift placed in a food package. A coupon, it says, does not affect the wholesomeness of food and is practically unappreciable in weight. On the other hand, toy gifts affect the weight and can not be inspected. A United States Supreme Court ruling on an appeal from Nebraska recently decided prize packages in food products were illegal under the Nebraska law.



Announcing a New Philadelphia Office for a Wonder Machine

¶ We've just opened a new Philadelphia office for the sale of the most remarkable coffee machine made—the Master Cutter and Refiner. It's just as different from ordinary coffee grinders as it looks.

¶ The great point about the Master is that it doesn't crush and grind coffee at all—it steel cuts it into particles of uniform size. You have your own "steel cut" coffee, and anything that can be claimed for any manufacturer's steel cut coffee, can be claimed for yours. Pulverizes coffee also. The machine comes in all sizes for all needs.

¶ But not only does it steel cut the coffee, but it removes the chaff. There's another talking point. Do you realize that if you have a Master Cutter and Refiner you can offer a grade and style of coffee that nobody in your town can match unless he has a machine too? And as for the coffee route peddler, you can leave him so far behind that you'll soon forget there was such a person,

Why a Manufacturer Should Be Permitted to Fix the Retail Price of His Product

Views of Various Believers in This Doctrine Who Offer Them as Arguments for the Pending Stevens Bill.

[The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has obtained and will from time to time present a series of statements by various well-known persons who believe that the manufacturer should have the right to tell the retailer what price he must get for the manufacturer's product. All of the views which will be presented can be taken as arguments for the pending Stevens Bill, which seeks to give a manufacturer that right.—Ed.]

No. 10.—By John A. Lake, Retail Grocer, and First Vice-President of the Michigan State Retail Grocers' and General Merchants' Associations.

NOTE.

Mr. Lake testified before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives in favor of the Stevens bill. His testimony became really an argument between himself and the various members of the committee as to whether the retail prices of food products should ever be fixed by the manufacturer. The argument was so intensely interesting and so closely touches the business of the readers hereof that we have obtained a stenographic report and here present it. It is not only intensely interesting, but gives a vivid glimpse of the feeling of the members of the Congressional Committee on the subject of price regulation.—Ed.

Mr. Lake. I believe that no article should be placed to the public except under governmental regulations and the Government or some department of the Government being satisfied that the consumer is getting value received for his money.

Mr. Sims. I want to ask you for my own information—of course I know what trade-mark means—but what does "special brand" mean? What particularly does it apply to? That is not registered, I suppose, is not a trade-mark? What does that language intend to cover?

Mr. Lake. I am somewhat dumfounded on that portion of the bill as to exactly what it means.

Mr. Sims. I know what patent means and what trade-mark means, but what is the meaning of "special brand"?

Mr. Lake. That special brand would have to be registered with the Government, the same as the other, as a special brand.

Mr. Sims. Do we have any such law now, requiring special brands to be registered?

Mr. Lake. Something like the Chase & Sanborn coffee, something one dealer put out would be a special brand.

The Chairman. But if they have not secured a trade mark, it would not be interfering with anybody's use?

Mr. Lake. It would be a special brand, however.

Mr. Barkley. A special brand would be any article a manufacturer put out with a special name on it, would it not? He may manufacture many kinds of articles and each one have a special name, if it is sold under that special name it might not be a trade mark?

Mr. Lake. Yes; it might not be a trade mark.

Mr. Barkley. Take shirts or shoes or watches, it might be a special brand by reason of having a special name on it, and all the articles of a certain character, made of a certain thing, might have that special brand, yet it may not be a trade-mark?

Mr. Lake. That is true.

Mr. Green. Perhaps Mr. Westefeld could define the term "special brand."

Mr. Lake. I shall be glad to yield to Mr. Westefeld.

Mr. Willis. How will this bill apply, if at all, in cases of auction sales or sales to merchandise brokers? The other witness, Mr. Westerfeld, spoke about bankrupt sales. Does this section include such sales as I have indicated?

Mr. Lake. Provided that the goods are damaged, or anything like that; but if not, I do not see why a man should have the right to auction them. We all know one thing, that a man conducts an auction sale not to give value received to the public, but conducts it for the privilege of getting all he possibly can out of it, and in an auction sale there is no competition. We have some stores where they sell oriental rugs and so forth, in our town, where they depend entirely upon auction sales for their profits.

Mr. O'Shaunessy. What is your business?

Mr. Lake. Retail grocer and meat dealer.

Mr. O'Shaunessy. This legislation is directed principally against proprietary articles. That is the trouble with the retail grocer, largely, is it not, that he has trouble with these proprietary articles in the market, the market for which is made by the manufacturer through advertising?

Mr. Lake. Very largely; yes, sir.

Mr. O'Shaunessy. And those articles are used, as you say, as bait by which in the last analysis the people are defrauded?

Mr. Lake. Yes, sir.

Mr. Talcott. But the manufacturers of proprietary articles themselves want this kind of legislation, do they not?

Mr. Lake. Our best ones do; yes, sir.

Mr. Talcott. There are cases in the courts where manufacturers of proprietary articles have been prosecuted for making contracts which bring about just these results?

Mr. Lake. There have been cases; yes, sir. The manufacturers who produce our best articles, the very best ones we hand out from our store, the ones which have got the greatest value to the community, these are the men who want this law.

Mr. Talcott. Do they not all want it?

Mr. Lake. I could not say as to that. I know that the majority of our best ones do.

Mr. Barkley. Here is something which bothers me. I do not know much about proprietary articles. Here, however, is a cigar. Two men are engaged in the cigar business, one on one side of the street and one on the other. One pays $100 rent and and pays his clerk $75 a month. The other one pays $50 rent and pays his clerk $60 a month. Now, they both want to sell the El Verso or the Portuando cigar, or some other brand; take that as an example. Each one of them buys from the same manufacturer and pays 6 cents apiece for the cigars. If the man who pays only $50 a month rent and $60 for his clerk can afford to sell that cigar at 8 cents or 9 cents or three for a quarter, and the other man cannot afford to sell them except at 10 cents straight, whose business is that, if the man who pays the less amount of rent and the less salary and expenses, if he cuts the price in behalf of the public?

Mr. Lake. I will answer that by saying that the man who pays $75 rent has the superior location where he can turn out more goods from that location, or he could not pay that much more.

Mr. Barkley. His profit comes in the volume of the business he does?

Mr. Lake. His profit comes in the volume of his business, yes, sir; and he has a superior location or he would not be paying the higher rental.

Mr. Barkley. But that will not prevent the other man selling at the less price if he can make a profit out of it and make a living, and the public would be benefited by the lower price?

Mr. Lake. The policy you are speaking of is a policy where I do not see that the public would be benefited, because in the first place the man in the superior location and with the superior salesman and under better sanitary conditions, such as he would naturally have, would appeal to the public as giving a better value, in my judgment. than the man who was willing to take a poor location and have his goods handled in a poor manner by a poor salesman.

Mr. Barkley. In other words, you think the public would prefer to pay 10 cents in the better store than to go across the street and get the same thing at a smaller price, although the store might be more humble?

Mr. Lake. I know I would, speaking for myself.

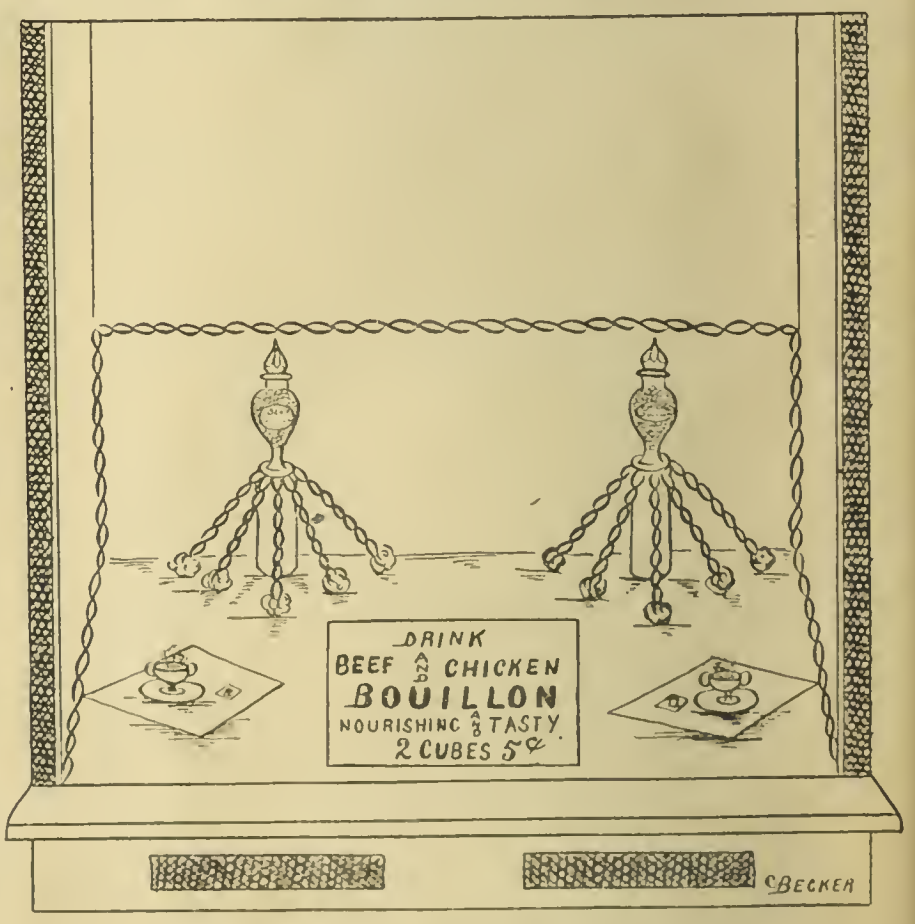
Mr. Barkley. That would be a matter wholly within your discretion?

Mr. Lake. And I believe the majority of the public would.

Mr. Willis. The chairman suggested a little while ago that under the law as it now is the manufacturer had the right to control his price by retaining title. To what extent is that done, if at all, in the line of business in which you are engaged?

Mr. Lake. Very little. So little that I do not believe I could mention a single article in our stock where we are limited at the present time. I will say that I believe the United States Government, from time to time, has taken part in just such transactions and has been a party to a transaction of that kind with a fixed price, and I offer here, a

Weekly Window Display Suggestions



Bouillon Suggestion.

This display should be a welcome cold weather display. Cover the floor with green paper, and also two tomato cans, which are to be used as pedestals for the jars of bouillon cubes. Fasten together five strips of white paper and hold them in place on top of each can with the glass jar of cubes. Tack the other ends to the floor in a semi-circle, a rosette at each end. On white napkins have an uncovered bouillon cube lying on its tinfoil wrapper, and beside this a bouillon cup. Cut a round piece of isinglass to fit the cup a half inch from the top. Take a bit of clean absorbent cotton and fluff it out to resemble steam and then lay it on the isinglass in the cup. The sign and the strip at the back of the window completes the display an illustration of that, a book that was published on the Pan-American Union, and an advertisement sent out by the Pan-American Union, of which our Government is a part, and it says this:

> This new edition, which will be ready for distribution in 10 days, will be limited in number. Orders for it therefore should be sent without delay, addressed to general headquarters in Washington. Copies over 10 in number will be delivered wholesale to book dealers anywhere in the United States or Canada, express or mail prepaid, at 50 cents per copy, with the understanding that the retail price shall not be less nor more than $1 per copy.

Mr. Willis. Of course you understand that the Pan-American Union is not an agency of the United States Government?

Mr. Lake. We take an active part in it; we recognize its policy.

Mr. Willis. We contribute to its work.

The Chairman. If necessary, we will expressly repudiate that.

Mr. Decker. If this proposition is a good thing for some articles, it would be good, then, for all articles, probably, would it not?

Mr. Lake. I do not agree with you sir.

Mr. Decker. Why not for all articles?

Mr. Lake. For a good many reasons. Any article that fluctuates a good deal in value, such as sugar, flour, corn meal, bulk oatmeal and goods like that, that we handle in bulk; dried fruit and stock like that. We have to follow a fluctuating price that could not come under a law of this kind.

Mr. Decker. Let us follow that up. Can you tell me about any manufactured article the cost of the materials of which do not fluctuate? What do they make soap out of, for instance?

Mr. Lake. I do not know, but it contains tallow.

Mr. Decker. Ivory soap?

Mr. Lake. Ivory soap. I will say here that my firm sells their tallow product to Procter & Gamble's Soap Co., and it is supposed that tallow largely goes into it, but the actual ingredients I am sure I do not know.

Mr. Decker. But it has tallow in it?

Mr. Lake. Yes, sir.

Mr. Decker. And tallow comes from beef?

The Chairman. If that Ivory soap is not made out of ivory, it is a misleading name.

Mr. Decker. Anyway, the materials in Ivory soap fluctuate in price, do they not? The values of the materials fluctuate in price?

Mr. Lake. I do not believe they fluctuate in the course of 10 years to the extent of 2 mills on a cake of soap.

Mr. Decker. Then it is not the economic principle that the prices of things to the consumer should not fluctuate if the cost of that thing does not fluctuate to the manufacturer?

Mr. Lake. If it does not fluctuate enough to change his market value, the principle which you name is right.

at the present rate, is likely to bring about depression of the industry due to over-expansion. He points out that an enormous increase in the quantities of foodstuffs awaiting shipment at this port, for which the shortage of vessels is responsible, has necessitated larger cold storage capacity. The deficiency, he says, has been supplied in part by the use of space in refrigerating cars.

Summarized Market Conditions.

Tea in slightly better inquiry. Market somewhat firmer on account of the sinking of the steamer "Yeddo" which had a large cargo for this country. Prices unchanged for the week.—Coffee still dull and heavy, although options had a slight advance during the week, which, however, they subsequently lost. Prices are about steady on last week's basis. Milds dull and unchanged.—Sugar about unchanged. Refiners 5.95 cents for granulated except Federal, which has cut to 5.85 cents. Raws quoted around 4.64 cents for Cubas.—Canned tomatoes still firm and higher, but demand light. Price unchanged on last week's basis. First future 1916 tomatoes were offered this week and some were sold at 80 cents in a large way, f. o. b. factory for No. 3s and 60 cents for No. 2s. Other canned goods unchanged for the week, including peas, corn and salmon. Prunes dull and spot undertone rather soft. Apricots very strong; peaches steady; currants irregular and scarce. Wheat declines, but later recovers and is still in speculative position. Flour very quiet. Price about unchanged for the week.

AMONG THE TRADE.

Beginning with the new year the firm of J. H. Huston Co., sugar brokers, will be styled J. H. Huston Co., Inc., with Truman L. Palmer president and Edward Liebe, secretary and treasurer.

Illness having compelled Ira Fallin, well known broker, to retire, a number of his former principals are now represented by Williams, Root, as follows: J. M. Paver Co., of Chicago, Ill., canned goods; P. E. Harris Co., of Seattle, Wash., large handlers of salmon, packed by the Hawk Fish Co. of Alaska; the California Canneries Co., of San Francisco, Cal., and New York, and Thos. F. Meyers Co., of Baltimore, Md., canned goods; Haven & Co., of San Jose, Cal., and Eugene O'Neill, of San Francisco Co., dried fruits.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week and comparatively small demand. The trade were interested in the information that the steamer "Yeddo," carrying a large cargo of tea for Boston and New York, has been sunk. This has not affected prices as yet, but has had a stimulating influence. The consumptive demand for tea is fair.

Coffee.

The coffee market has shown no change for the week, although the speculative market advanced slightly Tuesday. Coffee, however, has ruled rather heavy and the undertone, particulary in Santos grades, is still heavy. Mild coffees are also dull and heavy, with the future rather weak. Java and Mocha unchanged.

Sugar.

The sugar market remains about unchanged on last week's basis. All refiners have been, and still are, asking 5.95 cents for granuated, except the Federal, who as the week closed, dropped to 5.85 cents. Raws are somewhat weaker. The average quotation for Cuban sugar is 4.64 cents. The market is not showing any particular firmness at the present time. The consumptive demand is moderate.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose remains unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is in seasonable demand at unchanged prices. Sugar syrups are all very high and in light demand, except for manufacturing. Molasses continues to rule several cents above normal, owing to demand.

Fish.

The fish market has ruled quiet during the week. Mackerel continues in light supply and steady to firm in price. Eastern Scotch cured herring are in demand and steady to firm in price. Cod, hake and haddock are about in normal demand, at unchanged prices. Salmon shows no change and fair demand for the season. Domestic sardines are firm, with an advance pending, and in light demand. Imported sardines continue scarce and firm.

Canned Goods.

There is practically no change in the tomato situation for the past week. The market is fully maintained, with every indication of a steady advance. Corn is strong, but with no advance. Peas are in good demand at unchanged prices. Baltimore canned goods are without particular feature, although many packers have advanced their prices on string beans and spinach. California canned fruits have sold very well and there is quite a little inquiry for supplies to come forward, but prices have not materially advanced on any lines. Salmon is stronger in first hands, owing to a very good export demand. The spot market is unchanged.

Dried Fruits.

Peaches, while not active, are firmly held at the advance of several weeks ago. Apricots are in very light supply and are selling at full prices. Prunes are slightly easier on spot, as the supply is slightly in excess of demand. The market on the coast has receded about a ¼ cent a pound. The California Associated Raisin Co. have guaranteed their price until July, 1916, which would indicate a possibility of an advance on spot stock before very long.

Butter.

There has been an active demand for all grades of butter. The market is firm at 1 cent decline from a week ago. Strictly fancy butter continues to be very scarce. Medium grades are in ample supply. The consumption of butter has been in very good and we do not look for any change in the present conditions in the immediate future.

Eggs.

There is a good consumptive demand for all grades of eggs. Fresh eggs are cleaning up on arrival. The market today is 1 cent lower than a week ago. There is some increase in the receipts. The quality is running good. We look for an increase in receipts as the season advances, which will no doubt be followed by a slight decline. We are, however, going into a season when the weather is very uncertain and prices are likely to fluctuate.

Cheese.

The consumptive demand for cheese is light, which is characteristic of this season of the year. The stocks are about normal and the price ranging about the same as it has for the past few weeks and compares about the same as about a year ago.

Beans and Peas.

Marrow beans are slightly easier on account of lack of demand, but it looks very much as if they would be higher after the turn of the year. Pea beans are unchanged, but very strong, with indications of an advance. Lima beans are not much in demand, but the price is fully maintained, and, as they are cheaper in proportion than other beans, an advance can be confidently looked for.

Provisions.

Everything in the smoked meat line is steady, with a normal consumptive demand, with prices ranging about the same as about a week ago. Pure and compound lard are steady, with a light consumptive demand, with prices ranging same as last week. Barreled pork, dried beef and canned meats are dull, with a light consumptive demand, but do not show any change in price.

Poultry.

Fancy turkeys are scarce and high and command about the same price as they did over the Christmas holidays, which was possibly 5 cents over the normal price. There is a good demand for chickens and they are cleaning up on arrival at prices ranging the same as last week. Ducks and geese are ranging at the same price as last week.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Imported Fish Specialties.

As is usual during the holiday season, the herring market presents a very quiet appearance. Stocks of all varieties, Holland, Scotch and Norway are comparatively very small, held in very few hands, and prices are as high and as strong as ever.

The mackerel market is quiet, as usual at this season of the year, but stocks are smaller than ever of both Irish and Norway mackerel, and prices very firmly held.

Sardines.—French, Portuguese, as well as Norway, are moving in a hand-to-mouth way, and it is a good thing because otherwise, there would not be enough stock to go around. Our hopes of seeing lower prices for Norway sardines this week have not been realized. We had no cables this week in regard to the catch in Norway, and cannot therefore judge as to the actual situation.

Spiced anchovies, a delicacy appreciated particularly by the foreign element, are very scarce this season. Owing to the scarcity of this little fish in Norway, and owing to the extraordinary large demand for Norway smoked sardines from the powers now at war very few of these little fish have been made into spiced anchovies. Conse quently, Norway has shipped practically no anchovies this year. Our principal supplies came from Sweden, and there also there has been a scarcity of this fish. Consequently, prices for anchovies are higher, and stocks available very small.

STROHMEYER & ARPE CO.
New York.

Spices.

The market is quite active, with little pressure to sell at present prices. We have written repeatedly relative to the scarcity of spices. Supplies here are seriously short and available stocks are insufficient for the demand we will have over the next 60 or 90 days.

Pepper.—The spot supply is exceedingly limited, especially for bulk peppers. It is reported new crop Tellicherry and Aleppy will be later than usual, and it is also stated that the Aleppy crop is practically a failure. New crop Lampong is not due for harvesting until August and nothing can be said as to whether this crop will be short or normal. Higher prices are, therefore, probable in all grades of black peppers. White pepers are firmer and prices are likely to advance.

Red Peppers.—Are in very active demand and supplies here, especially the better grades, have been greatly reduced. All grades are likely to rule high for some time to come.

Cloves.—Are again firmer in all positions. The demand is on the increase.

Pimento (Allspice).—Rather quiet, though prices are steady and firm.

Mace.—Exceedingly scarce and all grades are higher. The supply here is insufficient for the normal demand.

Nutmegs.—Are very scarce at present, and sharply higher prices are likely.

Cassias.—All grades of bark are active. Spot supplies here are now almost nil. Prices have advanced and higher values are very probable.

Gingers.—In good demand at higher prices. Further advances are anticipated, because it is now indicated that all 1916 crops will be short.

Tapiocas.—Steadily advancing on account of higher freights and scarcity of tonnage. We look for still higher prices.

Wheat.

Every one interested in wheat is contrasting the present situation, and the outlook for 1916, with the conditions as they were a year ago. At that time we had harvested a record crop of winter wheat and a short spring wheat crop, but the two combined exceeded the crop of the preceding year by 128,000,000 bushels, the total for the United States and Canada being 1,051,000,000 bushels. Moreover our farmers, encouraged by the prospect of high prices, due to the European war, had seeded an enormous area to winter wheat and had also prepared the ground for a record spring crop. In Canada similar conditions prevailed. Therefore we had in prospect then what has since materialized in a harvest in North America of 1,347,000,000 bushels of wheat. Even with this handicap wheat advanced over 30 cents per bushel during the first three months of 1915, due to the immense foreign demand.

Now let us contrast this with the present outlook. To-day we have in prospect a very short winter wheat crop, and the indications are for smaller spring wheat crops in Canada and our own Northwest. Our government has given us an official report of the area of winter wheat and its condition as of December 1st. A greatly reduced area and poor condition is not conducive to normal crops. The condition of fall sown wheat in Canada is identical with ours, and the official report just issued shows a reduction in the area of 15 per cent. and the condition 88 per cent, compared with 94 per cent. last year.

In connection with the spring wheat crop they report that up to November 1st only 53 per cent. of the area was plowed, as against 71 per cent. last year, which resulted in the bumper crop of 1915.

It is quite a coincidence that this year's fall plowing is exactly the same percentage as two years ago, which resulted in a crop of 160,000,000 bushels. These figures are official. There has been no official report of fall plowing in our spring wheat States, but private reports agree that the percentage is very much short of last year and that there is very little likelihood of another bumper spring wheat crop being harvested. We are therefore forced to the conclusion that the 1916 crop of wheat in the United States and Canada will likely prove a very short one, which is an altogether different prospect than that of a year ago, when the United and Canada gave evidence of producing 1,500,000,000 and actually harvested from this promise the unprecedented total of 1,347,000,000 bushels.

If the war is to continue another twelve months we may see some very high prices. The chief element of strength at the present time is the immense foreign demand and the growing certainty that there will be a shortage of red winter wheat in this country because of the wretched condition in which the greater part of the crop was harvested. Farmers everywhere are finding that their binned wheat is in wretched condition, most of it unfit for milling. Whether this is 100,000,000 or 150,000,000 remains to be seen. As predicted, wheat has had a very rapid advance, and if the foreign demand continues unabated, will sell a great deal higher.

Bankruptcy in Cream of Wheat Profits.

Maryland Correspondent Gives Figures to Show Where the Retailer Comes Out. Doesn't Sell Any Himself Because It is Unfair to Unload the Loss on Something Else.

I wish to call your readers' attention to the unfairness of the Cream of Wheat Co. They charge the jobber $4.10 per case for Cream of Wheat, asking him to sell it for $4.50, less 1 per cent., at the most allowing the jobber 35 cents per case for one transaction, one delivery, etc. Then they expect the retail grocer to make 36 transactions, etc., at their suggested price of 14 cents, which will leave the grocer the large sum of 59 cents for the 36 transactions.

Without a doubt if the grocer sold all his merchandise on that basis, bankruptcy court would be his next abiding place.

We for one think it's unjust to put the loss on Cream of Wheat sales on any other article, as that is one of the indirect ways that foster chain stores. We will not sell any Cream of Wheat; there is plenty of good substitutes that allow you a reasonable profit, and if other grocers followed this system before long we would be able to buy Cream of Wheat at a price that would allow us a reasonable profit.

Retailers' Association Protests Against Libellous Moving Picture.

The Topeka, Kan., Retail Grocers' Association is up in arms against a moving picture which its members say is libellous. After viewing the picture the association sent the following letter to the Paramount Film Co., New York City:—

> Realizing the tremendous power which the moving pictures have in mouding public opinion, and being cognizant of the especially strong influence which is exercised by the pictures distributed by a concern of such high reputation as the Paramount Co., we desire to protest, on behalf of the 125 retail grocers of this city against the "Newspicture" exhibited this week at the Iris Theatre in this city, in which "Newspicture" the retail grocers of this country, as a class, are falsely accused of extorting exorbitant profits from their customers.
> It is a known fact, recognized by all well-posted economists, and officially indorsed by government investigation, that the average margin of profit in the retail grocery trade of this country is the narrowest margin enjoyed in any mercantile line. Repeated investigations, by city, State and national authorities, have almost invariably shown that whoever else may be to blame for the high cost of living, the retail grocer is not making excessive profits. Records of the great commercial agencies show that instead of giving evidence of undue prosperity, the line of merchandise most subject to financial disaster is the retail grocery business.
> It is most unfair and unjust for the "expert" employed by your company to prepare these statistics for your "Newspictures" to follow blindly the popular clamor, and send out pictures calculated to arouse public animosity against retail grocers. The vivid diagrams and blazing statistics, flashed on thousands of screens throughout this country, should, it seems to us, be scanned with the utmost care by your authorities, lest your "Newspictures" become purveyors of false doctrine and misunderstandings, instead of potent teachers of truth.
> We have the utmost confidence in the high character of your concern, nd feel sure that this protest will not go unheeded. We hope that you will advise us that no further "Newspictures" will be sent out under the Paramount brand making these false and slanderous accusations against the retail grocers of the country.

A Point Under the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Philadelphia, Pa., Dec. 29, 1915.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Having read with much interest and profit your "Possible Cases Under New Pennsylvania Compensation Act," we would like to ask a question:—

A firm accepts the act and insures say on a basis of $100 weekly salaries. A man leaves their employ and they are unable to replace him at the same wage and therefore increase their salaries by two or three dollars weekly. A grocer hires a boy on Saturday and thereby increases his salary list that week; or, suppose the merchant increases a salary, where would the dealer stand with the insurance company in any of these cases?

We would thank you for any information you might give on these points and believe they may be of interest to others as well as ourselves.

Very truly,
W. Delaney & Son.

An employer is granted an insurance rate based upon a certain payroll. If he increases his payroll, after getting the rate, he should at once communicate the fact to his insurance company and have a readjustment of rate, if that is necessary. As a matter of fact, it might not be necessary, for the increase might be too small to amount to anything. Nevertheless he should let the insurance company know, for some liability insurance companies—not all—will be only too ready to seize at any pretext to avoid paying claims.

Business is Good.

Philadelphia, Pa., Dec. 30, 1915

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We give herewith extracts taken from the December Digest of Trade Conditions issued by the Franklin National Bank of Philadelphia, which should prove interesting.

A general casting up of the situation at this time indicates that perhaps 95 per cent. of the business in this country are sold up or oversold and therefore on a profit paying basis.

Even in our most prosperous times we have never before reached a stage in which as large a proportion as 95 per cent. of business were enjoying their rightful measure of such prosperity.

Our exports from the thirteen principal customs districts for the four weeks ending October 30th were 315 million dollars and our imports 123 million dollars, leaving us a favorable trade balance of 192 million dollars.

Our general business, both foreign and domestic, is most clearly demonstrated in our bank clearings which for 160 principal cities in October were 20 billion dollars, compared with 12 billions for the same cities a year ago.

Net earnings of railroads for August were 100 million dollars, compared with 90 million dollars a year ago, a gain of 11 per cent. Gross earnings so far as reported for October show a gain of 15 per cent. over a year ago.

The number of idle cars on the first of November was 25,000, compared with 78,000 a month ago and 170,000 a year ago. It is estimated that the total number of cars without loads which are fit for service does not exceed 5,000, while fully 100,000 loads are waiting for cars.

Rails ordered in October totaled 490,000 tons, compared with 360,000 tons a month ago and 49,000 tons a year ago.

Iron ore shipments from Lake Superior for October were 7,147,000 tons, compared with 4,242,000 tons a year ago.

The production of pig iron for October was 3,125,000 tons, compared with 1,783,000 tons a year ago.

The unfilled tonnage of the Steel Corporation on the first of the month was 6,165,000 tons, compared with 3,461,000 tons a year ago.

The labor situation has shown considerable improvement for the month. The percentage of idle labor in the country is the smallest we have ever known, even during periods of our greatest prosperity.

With the largest crops in our history, the largest amount of money in circulation and the greatest percentage of employed labor, and the facts as stated above it would seem that prosperity is here and is likely to stay with us for some time and that in the natural course prices on many lines will go much higher. Let each be prepared and buy now as he is able.

Yours truly,
Halpen, Green & Co.

Stevens Bill Only Affects Trade-marked Merchandise.

New York, December 30, 1915.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—May we ask your attention to the persistent attempt which representatives of the National Retail Dry Goods Association are making to misrepresent the character and purposes of the Stevens standard price bill, which has received the endorsement of practically all organized business in the country; the secretary of that organization and its traveling officials are being repeatedly quoted in the trade press as making statements which have no justification in fact.

Such statements, among others, are that the Stevens bill is intended for use on all merchandise.

The language of the bill specifically restricts its privileges to trade-marked branded products; its sole purpose—as plainly indicated by its language—is to deprive dishonest advertisers, who do not possess—or who are not content to rely on their own—good will and reputation, of the power to use standard articles of established worth and stable value—which the consumer calls for by name—as "bait" to lure and deceive the public and to injure and destroy smaller competitors.

Yours faithfully,
American Fair Trade League,

MR. GROCER—To be sure of large, steady profits, you must sell staples—products all of us are using all the time.

Statistics prove that each of the hundred millions of people in the United States consumes an average of about eighty pounds of sugar each year. This average consumption, multiplied by the number of your customers, represents a large proportion of your gross sales.

Your problem, then, is to secure a moderate profit on each sale, which when multiplied by thousands of sales will make your final profit overtop the slow large-profit sellers.

Go To It Talk for Clerks.

That was a great thought in last week's from a young Southern fellow who wrote the strong words about clerks getting on the job. Good dope, that. First class! One day last month one of the clerks in a store where I go regular came up to me and said, "See here, can't you give me a scheme to make more money? I'm only getting fourteen a week here and it ain't enough. How can I make more?"

"It's a cinch," I said, "earn more and you'll get more."

I handed it to him that way without the gloves because I'd often sized him up around the store. He's one of these fellows that would rather talk than eat and never feels quite comfortable without a coffin tack in his trap. He's young—maybe he'll get steered straight pretty soon and be President before he's dead.

Well, sir, I was sure one bully clerk myself in the old days. I wouldn't let anything stop me from doing what I set out to do. If I started out to get to the can with the vanilla wafers in it and the way was blocked, I'd work for an hour till I cleared it. That was me all right.

My boss got so he'd lean on me for everything. I suppose that was my fault, for he pretty soon saw that I could do anything. That was the only reason he was willing to pay me the enormous salary I got—30 cents a day, and short hours—7 in the morning till 9 at night. I was head of the delivery department too. Also the tail.

Why one day I promised the boss that we'd do so much business on a certain Saturday. When it was five minutes of ten and closing time, we were $5.00 or something like that short. I simply let him take it out of my salary. I had gave my word and I felt like I'd die before I'd go back on it.

That's the kind of a king I was.

We didn't have any automobile delivery wagons in them days. I used a push cart that held eight tons. One day I'd promised a woman in the other end of the town to have her order over by a certain time. I started out with it in the push cart single-handed and alone. Half way over it broke down. Think that fazed me? You don't know me. What did I do? Taking the woman's basket in me teeth I knocked down a horse that was going past, kicked him free from the shafts, yanked him on his feet again, jumped on his back with the basket still in me teeth, and rode away. I got to the woman's house just one minute before the time. Then I fed the horse a vanilla wafer I had in my pocket and went back. I explained all about it to the woman that owned the animal, and she wanted to marry me right then and there. What d'ye know about that?

I'll never forget the time I broke up a row in our store. I was thirteen then and was working on Saturdays. We did business with a few darkies and some time they would stop on their way home late at night.

One night three bucks started rough house with the boss. He didn't know how to handle 'em and I could see he was looking to me to take care of it, so I spoke real sharp to 'em. They thought I was a kid and started to laugh. Then I showed what a general I was. I hit one of 'em plumb between the eyes with an egg, another one with a rotten orange and I give the other one a dose of pepper. When I had 'em foozled that way I picked up the huskiest one and swung him around my head a time or two and knocked down the other two with him. Then I called the police force and he came right away and locked 'em all up.

For that I got my salary for that day. The boss hadn't intended to give it to me—he said I'd et up more than 30 cents' worth.

The boss got so he'd depend a lot on me about the buying too. A salesman would come in and want to sell the boss some prunes, say. The boss would call me right in and tell me to go out and see how many boxes we had. I'd go out and count 'em and come in and tell him. Then on my judgment as to how many we had, he'd decide whether to buy or not. It was a big responsibility for a kid like me and that's what made me old before me time. I often think what would have happened if I hadn't been able to count right.

I remember another case, too. This was the biggest thing I ever did. One of our best customers came in one day and wanted a can of a certain kind of California peaches. We hadn't any more. I thought we were going to get more right away, so I told her we'd have 'em for her. When I told the boss, he said none of the jobbers had any and you couldn't get any short of California. Now that would have squashed most clerks, but it didn't squash me. What did I do? I went out and oiled up me little velocipede and believe me or not, I rode clear out to California and got it! I had gave me word and that settled it—I would have rode to China if I had had to. That was the way I was built.

There's blame few clerks like I was—blamed few. But it pays, boys, it pays. Why when I came back with that can of peaches inside my little black shirt and handed it to the woman, I'll never forget the way she looked at me. It was love, all right. THE STROLLER.

Something New—Candied Cranberries.

The Department of Agriculture has issued a bulletin to housewives giving some information about a new product—candied cranberries. Candied cranberries make a delicious and inexpensive holiday confection, much resembling candied cherries, but having a distinct flavor of its own. This is a suggestion to housewives from the home economics experts of the United States Department of Agriculture, who have been developing new uses for the cranberry. They have developed a method which if followed closely, gives a bright, firm, plump, semi-transparent candied fruit, which can be eaten as a sweetmeat or used to give a touch of color to frosted Christmas cakes, whipped cream or custards, or which can be used like citron in cakes or puddings or chopped up and added to "tutti-frutti" ice creams. The secret of candying cranberries lies in handling the fruit so that it will become saturated with sugar.

Government's Anti-Trust Suit Against Washington Commission Merchants Ends in Fines.

Defendants Make Plea Which Was Tantamount to Plea of Guilty, Agree Not to Do It Any More and Are Fined Twenty-five Dollars Each.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
December 30, 1915.

Readers of this correspondence will remember the report several months ago of a prosecution brought by the Government against a long list of wholesale dealers in produce in this city. They were also commission merchants. The charge was conspiracy to restrain competition.

The cases have been brought to trial this week, the defendants all plead nolo contendere, which is tantamount to a plea of guilty, and after agreeing not to go on interfering with competition, they were fined $25 each.

The indictment under which the fines were imposed followed an investigation made under direction of President Wilson in the summer of 1914 into the rumor that the European war was being made an excuse for raising the prices of foodstuffs. It was charged that the merchants agreed among themselves as to prices to be paid shippers and to be charged buyers. Following indictments on September 4, 1914, the merchants pleaded not guilty, later withdrawing the pleas and filing demurrers. The latter were overruled and the defendants were called on during the week to plead again. They then entered pleas of nolo contendere. In imposing the fines the Chief Justice stated the was satisfied that the offense was rely technical.

The defendants were Daniel P. llins, Frank B. Guest, James W. asley, John W. Lynn, David W. llinger, Alonzo R. Lawrence, illiam Brayshaw, Andrew W. lley, Oliver O. Spicer, James M. lloway, Brevard D. tailer Beats a Collection Agency.

Adolph Drobneck, a West Lynn, ss., grocer, recently won a suit which s brought against him by the Cred-rs' National Clearing House, Boston, ollection agency. According to the e Drobneck agreed to pay $30 per ır to this company to collect all bills ed to him in his grocery business, l signed contract to that effect with company. The company only col-ted $8 and then brought suit against obneck to recover for two years' vice fees, amounting to $60. The dence showed that Drobneck had re-ved nothing from the company and defense was that he did not know was signing a contract agreeing to $30 per year to the company, irre-ctive of the collections the company de. He also claimed he signed the ıtract through the fraud of an agent the company. The jury found for defendant because of the fraud, as orance of the contents of the con-ct would not have been a defense.

No. 344.—Something About Accepting Debtors' Notes in Settlement of Accounts.

For a long time I have had on file a memorandum to write something about the loose practice of accepting the notes of a debtor in settlement of an account. Other things have heretofore crowded it out but the receipt of the following letter from a Cincinnati, Ohio, reader who does not wish his name disclosed, gives me the chance I have been waiting for:—

Cincinnati, Ohio.

We want some advice in advance about a situation that is likely to arise in the near future with one of our customers—a good buyer, but not always prompt in his settlements. On December 1st he owed us about $500, most of which was considerably overdue. We had been after him to pay it without result, until about the middle of December he came in and proposed to give us a note in payment for three months, bearing interest. We accepted it, thinking it a good way to put the account on an interest basis, and now we hear that he is in a bad way and only those who get in early are likely to get anything. We would like to go after him right away, but the note is not due until March 16th, and it seems that we must hold off until that time. Please advise us if this conclusion is right and tell us if there is any way to get out of the situation we have placed ourselves in.

This is pretty nearly a typical case. The same thing is happening all the time. Both wholesale and retail dealers, especially the former, when some customer gets behind, will propose a note as the next best thing to cash. And the idea is all right, if it is carried out properly. The proper way to carry it out is never—where there is the slightest question about the present and future standing of the debtor—to accept the note in payment of the account. It should be accepted only as collateral security, with an agreement that in case it becomes necessary in the opinion of the creditor, the latter can immediately begin suit on the original account.

When a note is accepted in payment of the account, you have merely postponed payment that far ahead, and no matter what happens to the debtor's finances meanwhile, you can only sit down and wait.

The average business man does not understand the difference between the two ways of accepting the note, and he therefore accepts it, as a rule, in a way which could easily be construed into an intent to take it in payment.

The creditor who takes a note in payment of an account is not only no better off than he was before, but he is really worse off because he cannot enforce his claim as soon as he could before he took the note. His original claim on the book account was just as clear and good, and almost as easily proven in court, as his new claim on the note. Therefore he gains nothing by changing the form of his claim from book account to promissory note, but as I have already said, he actually loses.

Everything depends on the way in which the note tendered in settlement is taken. The general rule is that a promissory note given in settlement of an account is not to be considered as having been accepted in payment, unless there is an agreement to that effect between the parties. Usually there is never any actual agreement between a creditor and his debtor, that a note given by the latter shall be taken in payment or not in payment. The debtor, who is usually behind in his accounts or he wouldn't tender the note at all, says something like this: "I'll give you a note to fix up (or clean up, or settle, or cover) that account of mine." The creditor takes the note and later the court may have to decide what was meant by "fix up," or "clean up," "or settle," or "cover," or whatever the expression was. Remember that the agreement may be implied from the conduct of the parties, and if the court holds that the note was taken in payment it means that the old account is dead, suit can never be brought on it, the note has been substituted for it, and the only remedy is to try to collect that, which can only be attempted, as I have explained, when it comes due.

Where a note is taken without stipulations of any kind, there is always the chance that a court may decide in that way. There are many cases in which this made all the difference between losing the account and collecting it in full.

Even where it is clear that a note was not accepted in payment, but only as collateral security, the creditor will not usually be allowed to bring action on his original claim until the note comes due, because when he accepted the note he gave the debtor that much more time and the court will not allow him to go back on his promise.

What is the best way to safeguard one's self against such possibilities? There are two main ways:

First—Make the note payable on demand or at sight instead of at some future date. Such a note can be sued on at any time. Naturally the debtor will not always agree to this, for his reason for giving the note is to gain delay until some future time. He will often agree to it, however, when the creditor gives his word not to negotiate the note or do anything with it before a certain date unless it becomes necessary.

Second—If the note has to be made payable at a future time, then have the debtor sign a memorandum when he gives it that the note is for collateral security only, and granting permission to the creditor, before the note matures if he considers it necessary, to begin suit on the original account. If the creditor does begin suit on the original account before the note matures, he must first give the note back.

The only thing I can say to my friend from Cincinnati is that he can answer his question by applying what I have said above, to the facts of his own case. If he can prove that he did not take the note in payment—although in his letter he says that he did—he can proceed against his debtor at once on the original account. If he did take the note in payment—and the fact that it bears interest is strong evidence that he did—he must wait until its maturity, no matter what happens.

Bill Taxing Mail Order Houses Introduced in Congress Again.

Was First Introduced Several Months Ago But Never Got Anywhere—Would Make All Mail Order Concerns Doing Interstate Business Pay Certain Percentage on Gross Business.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
December 30, 1915.

Several months ago I mentioned a bill which had been introduced taxing all mail-order houses which do an interstate business a certain percentage of their business. The bill never got anywhere, but has this week been reintroduced. I give its text here:—

A BILL

To provide for a tax upon all persons, firms or corporations engaged in interstate mail order business, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, that all persons, firms or corporations in the United States which are now conducting, or which may hereafter conduct, a mail order business interstate for the purpose of selling goods, wares and merchandise direct to the consumer shall pay a tax of 1 per centum upon the total cash value of all goods, wares and merchandise sold within any State.

Sec. 2. That every person, firm or corporation conducting a mail order business as defined in Section 1 of this act shall keep in proper books, to be provided by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, an accurate and complete account of all goods, wares and merchandise of every character and description so sold, together with the actual selling price of the same.

Sec. 3. That on the 31st day of December after the passage of this act, and on the 31st day of December of each year thereafter, every person, firm or corporation engaged in such business shall render a full and complete statement to the Secretary of the Treasury, upon blanks to be furnished by him, of the total cash value of all goods, wares and merchandise sold during the year in the various States of the United States.

Sec. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine the amount of the tax to be paid by each person, firm or corporation (at the rate of 1 per centum upon the total cash value of all goods, wares and merchandise sold within any State) engaged in such mail order business, and shall give notice of the amount of said tax due and payable, pursuant to the terms of this act in such manner as in his judgment is most practicable.

Sec. 5. That every person, firm or corporation subject to said tax under the provisions of this act and reporting to the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay said tax on or before March 1st of each and every year after this act shall become a law.

Sec. 6. That the Federal courts of the United States shall have power to enforce the collection of said tax upon the application of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Sec. 7. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall apportion said tax among the several States in the ratio of the actual amount of goods sold in each State.

Sec. 8. That the tax so apportioned shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to the various State Treasurers entitled thereto; said tax to be used in such manner and for such purposes as the said States may by law direct.

Still Reporting Good Dry Goods Business.

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:—

Current wholesale distribution of dry goods shows a marked advance over the corresponding period of a year ago.

The large increase in road orders—mail orders—the number of telegraphic orders from all over the country and the increased number of customers in the market, indicate that the retail dry goods trade is having an exceptional holiday business.

Orders for spring delivery show a large increase over the corresponding period of a year ago.

Don't Waste Time Putting Sugar in Bags

It's a foolish waste of time for a grocer to buy sugar in a barrel, open the barrel, scoop out the sugar, weigh it (giving a little overweight every now and then), fold the bags, tie the bags, pay for the bags and the twine, when he can buy a CONTAINER of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR, slit it open in five seconds with a pocketknife, lift out the CARTONS and sell them! That's the beauty of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR—there's nothing to do but SELL it; no work, no bother, no loss of time, no loss from overweight, no expense for bags or twine.

Franklin Carton Sugar Will Please Your Customers

Women appreciate the clean, white purity of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR AS SOON AS THEY SEE IT! They KNOW it's better sugar than they can buy any other way. They like the CARTON because it doesn't burst, fall over, spill or tear. They like it because they WANT CLEAN sugar. Once you start your customers buying FRANKLIN SUGAR in CARTONS, they'll always want to buy it and you'll want to sell it to them. FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is the right proposition for both the grocer and his customers.

You can buy FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in the original CONTAINERS of 24, 48, 60 and 120 lbs.

PENNEGAR BROS.
OPPOSITE POST OFFICE

I consider this pretty good advertising. It has all the elements and ought to have produced business that could be traced directly to it. This advertisement would have shown up a good deal better, however, if less matter had been used in it. It is a little crowded. At least three times as much space should have been used between the paragraphs. Perhaps a headline with a little sharper meaning, like "Fresh Christmas Groceries" would have been stronger. I believe also that it would have been better to alter the advertising scheme a little. What I mean is this: Around Christmas of course every grocer, if he advertises anything, advertises Christmas goods. That means raisins and plum pudding and the balance of the list. Unless, therefore, your advertising of these things is unusual in some way, it is apt to get lost in the shuffle. How can it be made unusual? In several ways. You might have something special in cluster raisins, either in size or quality. You might have something special in a plum pudding, or in a fruit cake or in anything. I should get something special and out of the ordinary, if I could—it might be home made, or imported, or in some other way above the ordinary brands that anybody can pick up anywhere. It might simply be a new brand, which you could talk about from that standpoint.

Pennegar Bros. have gotten hold of this idea, to some extent, in the double column advertisement "Made in America," which I am also reproducing below. They have an idea there.

I think this Made in America idea might have been carried further. There could have been a talk about how some people thought imported jams and marmalades were the best, and looked on domestic as second grade, and how the war, by cutting down the supply of imported, had directed public attention to domestic, with the result of finding some brands of it even better than the foreign. How you had gathered together six of the very finest domestic brands, and submitted them for the customer's decision. Make a sort of event of it, with a demonstration at the same time you advertise.

In spite of these suggestions for improvement, however, Pennegar Bros. are doing good advertising and I have no doubt they are getting good results from it.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

Why not make 1916 the biggest year organization work? Surely there is om for better organization in Pennlvania.

One of the reasons, we believe, for k of organization is the fact that siness men do not treat it seriously. ey admire the organizations of ades and other branches of business, t seem unwilling to lend any aid toard the accomplishment of good ornization for themselves.

How can we change this condition? e never find men who do not believe organization, but we do find an infference on men's part to do the real rk that counts for success.

All the ills of business cannot be red through organization, but most them can, and the first step is to t men together, so that understanding ch other they can work together.

Towns that have a good association e better towns to do business in and nditions are more satisfactory. There everything to gain and nothing to se by organizing.

If organization is a good thing, let's mmer it home. Let us try to make ch and every organization better and ore useful. Let us try to teach at ast that from associated effort men n get dividends in proportion as they e willing to "put in" the work. That is not half as important for them to onder what they are to receive as hat they are to give.

The State Organizer, backed up by e manufacturers in the Pennsylvania lan, is doing all possible to spread the ork of organization, co-operation and rvice. If you believe in co-operation ou must co-operate. This means every tail merchant in the State. Is there association in your town? If not, hy not? Get in touch with the Organizer and let him help you get one arted.

Let us all work together, not only to art new organizations, but to develop ose that are in existence, to make em bigger, better and more useful.

SAY TO CUSTOMERS

"Try SUNSHINE biscuits this time—their appetizing goodness and crisp freshness will surprise you and delight your family."

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry g ods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

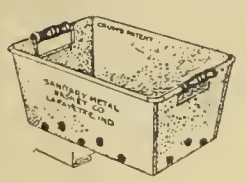
FLEISCHMANN'S YEAST

is purchased, say, two or three times every week by the housewife who bakes. And every time she comes in for a "cake of yeast" you have a fine chance to to talk up and sell her other things too.



Deliver Your Goods in Sanitary Metal Baskets

These baskets are made of galvanized iron, reinforced and strengthened so as to last a long time. Being perforated, they are self-cleaning, also useless to the housewife enabling you to sell your wooden boxes.

Sanitary Galvanized Iron Metal Baskets are economical because they save space; durable, will outlast three of the old kind; modern, brings delivery system up to date; cleanly, no place for dirt to stay.

Price, $4 to $6 per dozen on baskets holding from one to four pecks. Order to-day

Sanitary Metal Basket Co., Lafayette, Ind.

THE VALUE OF BRIGHT STORES

¶ The difficulty of making a sale—whether it be dry goods or vegetables, jewelry or shoes is increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Other things being equal, the Electrically lighted shop will do more business than the store which uses other illuminants. "Indoor Daylight" can only be obtained by the use of Mazda Electric lamps.

In Three Homes

When a grandmother, maintaining her own home, and her daughter, maintaining another home, and the daughter's daughter, maintaining a third home, all use Wheatena as a regular part of their daily food, what does it mean? Just what we have repeatedly said, that Wheatena is peculiarly the food of succeeding generations and when it once gets in it is apt to run through all the branches of the family.

The hearts of selected wheat.

MODERN MERCHANT AND GROCERY WORLD

VOL. LXI. PHILADELPHIA, January 10, 1916. No. 2

Many a good man is today wearing his heart out trying to bring success to a store which ought never to have been put where it is, and for which there is no room. Such a fight can never be wholly successful; it is always better to give it up.

USE
GOLD MILK

And Save Money on your Milk Bills

Mr. Grocer:—Why not be a milkman, too? You can be the biggest milkman in your neighborhood if you tell your customers to add two cans of cold water to one tall can of HIRES GOLD MILK, and then use on the table for drinking and in the kitchen for cooking.

Do Women Say This to You?

"Oh, no, I don't want to bother with it—it spoils too easily."

This is the spoken or unspoken reason hundreds of women have for not using Rennet regularly in their homes. All such women will buy James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet, for every bottle is guaranteed. We can safely guarantee it because its making is as scrupulously clean as anything can be.

We also guarantee it to do its work with milk in three to five minutes that's another point to use with women who haven't been using rennet.

And here is the argument to use with you—Shinn's Liquid Rennet pays you 100 per cent. profit.

Just What 1915 Did to Imported Groceries

Well-Known New York Importer Describes Position of Salt and Prepared Fish, Foreign Canned Goods, Olive Oil and Various Other Foreign Food Specialties. An Interesting Recital.

The herring is an article of food almost indispensable for some of our foreign population, like Russians, Poles, Austrians, Germans, Norwegians, Swedes, Danes, etc. Holland herrings are consumed principally by the Germans, Austrians and Poles, while the Scotch and Irish herrings are liked best by the Jewish, Russian and Austrian Poles and kindred nations. The Norwegian and Iceland herrings are taken principally by the Scandinavian people.

Holland had an exceptionally large catch of herrings during 1915, and in spite of the large quantity of Holland herrings taken by the fishermen, prices have ruled higher than for many years past; in fact, a barrel of Holland herrings, which under ordinary circumstances would sell in Holland at about $7, sold this season as high as about $27; naturally, the consumption in the United States of Holland herring this year was practically nil.

Scotch herrings, which under ordinary circumstances would sell at from $10 to $12, sold as high as $25 and over.

Norway herrings, which ordinarily would sell at from $8 to $10 sold at twice that value. The consumption of Norwegian and Iceland herrings this season was about the same as in former years, in spite of the prevailing high prices.

The end of 1915 shows available only very small stocks of all kinds of herrings, consequently very little chance of a decline in price for the very near future.

In Norway the catch of mackerel was only about one-fifth of the quantity taken last season. Usually almost the whole quantity taken of Norway mackerel was shipped to the United States. This year was an exception, as some of the countries now at war took quite some lots of mackerel, owing to the scarcity of other foodstuffs; consequently we here in the United States had to pay high for these Norway mackerel, and the demand has been very seriously restricted by the high asking price, particularly in view of the fact that some American mackerel has been caught of very acceptable quality, and they have made a serious competition with the Norwegian product.

Irish mackerel are also about again as high as they usually are, and naturally the consumption is limited.

The imported sardine situation for 1915 certainly presents very interesting reading. Not so very many years ago imported sardines were considered a great luxury, and comparatively small quantities were imported, but from year to year the quantity imported presented larger dimensions. With the larger output and the larger import, prices have gradually become so low that imported sardines have become a standard on the American market, and a very popular food product, and a comparatively cheap one. Of course, for several years past French sardines have played only a very small part in the markets of the world, as the catch of French sardines has been a failure for several years past. Gourmands who want the best of everything are buying French sardines; that is, well-known, good brands, and are paying the price, no matter how high. The prices for French sardines have been very high for several years past, and the advance which has taken place in this commodity has not been as large this season as in other sardines. When French sardines became so very scarce, the Portuguese product took their place, and very large quantities of Portuguese sardines have found consumption in the United States, particularly as some of the Portuguese packers have adopted the French method of preparing the sardines, and are producing an article which is not only very satisfactory, but really a very fine product. Owing to the advance of all raw materials, tin, solder, colors which are used in decorating the tins, and not forgetting the increased cost of labor, prices for Portuguese sardines naturally have been advanced and sardines of the usual quarter size, which ordinarily would sell at around $7.50 and higher, are quoted today in the market at about $12, not an unreasonable advance, which still leaves the Portuguese sardines a cheap food product. The catch in Portugal has not been very satisfactory, consequently shipments have not been forthcoming as freely as they ought to; stocks here are very small and held only in very few hands and prices are likely to hold firm and are probably likely to advance a little in the near future.

From a very small beginning the Norwegian sardines have come to be imported in very large quantities, and have found favor with the trade in general. Twenty-five years ago an import of 25 cases seemed rather large to us; to-day that many thousand cases are only a drop in the bucket. Norwegian sardines are a real delicacy, a small tender, delicate fish, the preparation of which makes the bones practically disappear, and the skin so soft that it can be eaten with the sardine, and prepared with lots of real, good olive oil, making this not only a delicacy, but a very wholesome food product. All doctors nowadays are preaching to their patients to use lots of olive oil. A great many cannot take olive oil in its natural form, and many have found the solution of this problem by eating some of these sardines, which combine the health and strength giving qualities of the fish, together with the beneficial effects of the olive oil. Of course, Norwegian sardines have always found a large market in England, Germany, Russia and the other countries now at war, but since the beginning of the war the fighting forces have eaten an incredible quantity of these Norwegian sardines. The Norwegian packers, of course, took advantage of the situation and advanced their prices by leaps and bounds and still the buyers did not cease to buy. They could not get enough of them. Of course, we had some Norwegian sardines which we had brought over before the advance, and good-natured, as the American business man is, we continued to sell our stock at prices which were very much lower than their parity in the primary market. Of course, our stocks and those of our competitors are now coming to an end, and if we want to buy any Norwegian sardines to supply our trade, we shall have to pay the same prices that the packers are getting from other buyers, or be without them. As it is, we are afraid that we cannot get those high asking prices, and consequently it is likely that Norwegian sardines will be rather scarce for a short time to come, or until the countries now at war stop buying or buying at almost any price they are asked.

Norwegian sardines, which before the war sold at about $7 or $8 readily, sell to-day at from $10 to $12, and the higher grades in proportion.

Kippered and tomato herrings were imported in very large quantities before the war from England, Scotland and Norway. Since the beginning of the war the import of these commodities has practically stopped, as prices have been beyond our reach. American packers are now endeavoring to put on the markets some kippered and tomato herring, but as the quality of the American herring does not compare very favorably with the foreign product, of course, these American kippered and tomato herrings are not finding very much favor with the trade that is accustomed to eat the imported article. When normal conditions return it is not likely that the American product will be in a position to compete with the foreign article.

At one time, not very many years ago, the American market knew only French peas, besides, of course, the American product, but the home consumption of peas in France gradually became so large that the French people did not have very many peas to offer for export, and naturally, they advanced their prices so that Belgium, which produces a large quantity of peas, became a competitor of French peas in our market and gradually captured the American market entirely for the Belgium product. During 1915, of course, owing to the devastation of Belgium, no Belgian peas were packed, consequently none were received. Italy, which lately appeared as a competitor to the Belgian product, put an embargo on the exportation of peas. Consequently no Italian peas, or very few if any, were received here. This has put the American manufacturer on his mettle, and some very fine American peas have been produced, which are well liked by the trade and which this year have taken the place of the imported product. It remains to be seen whether the American product will be able to entirely take the place of the imported goods after the war is over. Personally, we do not think that this will be the case, because the American product is comparatively too high, although there seems to be very little reason why the American peas should not be able to compete with the imported article.

For many years past Italy has shipped to us very large quantities of preserved tomatoes, tomato sauce and tomato paste. Practically right after the beginning of the war Italy prohibited the exportation of these commodities, and to-day this embargo has not been lifted as yet, as far as the tomato sauce and paste is concerned. Italy stands practically alone, and has no competitor as yet on this tomato sauce. No shipments coming forward, this market, naturally, is practically bare of this commodity, but another fact has to be reckoned with when the importation of this tomato sauce will be resumed. Lately the Food Department of the port of New York found that some of this Italian tomato sauce did not come up to the standard required by the United States pure food laws, and quite a number of large shipments were detained and ordered re-exported. Authorities are not agreed whether the bacillae contained in this tomato sauce are harmful to the public health or not. The scientists claim not, while the Americans differ with them. Be that as it may, when the importation of this Italian tomato sauce is resumed, the consequence will be that a better product will be imported, although it may cost a little more, it will be so much better in quality another blessing of the pure food law.

Sprats, which in spite of the plain marking on the tins, are usually bought and sold for sardines, have been practically out of the market for several months past. We imported these sprats principally from Belgium and from France. From Belgium, of course, none could be had this season, not a single can, because the factories are closed. From France we have been unable to import any, because the prices have advanced so very materially that it would be impossible for us to import these goods and sell them at a profit. It seems that the French Government has taken these sprats, which are somewhat cheaper than sardines, for army food, and a small can of sprats, which we usually sell, including freight and duty, at about $5.50 to $6 per case of 100 tins, is sold to-day by the French packer to the French Government at a price of about $6.75 to $7 in France. Adding to this the duty and the freight, it would make this product unsalable in the American market.

Since the enactment of the pure food law the consumption of pure olive oil in the United States has assumed enormous proportions. Of course, not only the pure food law has caused this effect, but also because it has become recognized that an olive oil food diet is splendid for the human system. Consequently, most, if not all, physicians to-day recommend lavish use of pure and good olive oil. In spite of the very large consumption, and notwithstanding the fact that tinplate, solder, labor advanced, olive oil practically during the entire year of 1915 remained unchanged in price. Only of late, when it became known that the new Italian crop is likely to be a failure, have prices begun to advance, and it is likely that further advances will follow and that we may have to pay higher prices for this commodity in the near future. We still had hopes in spite of the reports as to the poor crop in Italy and reports as to the appearance of the olive worm attacking the new fruit, that these reports were somewhat exaggerated, but we now have absolutely reliable information that owing to the very bad weather prevailing in the olive growing districts of Italy, the crop really promises to be a very poor one; consequently higher prices are likely to be the result.

Another article which only very few years ago was practically unknown on the American market is the Spanish red pepper, called pimentos morrones, in mercantile language. This article has become practically a standard, and is used extensively in making salads, for decorating dishes, and is finding many uses in the culinary department of the finest hotels and of households. The very same article is not produced in any country but Spain, at least nothing that will in any way compare with the Spanish product. The crop in Spain, which promised very well early in the summer, through unfortunate circumstances, proved to be a very big failure, consequently prices for pimentos have been advanced; furthermore, shipments are coming in very sparingly, owing to poor shipping accommodations, and the market is rather bare, while the demand continues excellent.

One of the scarcest articles in the market is French mushrooms and many people write to us that we may not expect further shipments before the end of the war. The reason for the stoppage of shipments of French mushrooms is easily be found in the fact that the experienced working people can be used in packing those mushrooms. Each ose little champignons has to be eled and prepared in a real, fine man-r, and labor being able to do such ork is extremely scarce in France; nsequently little or no mushrooms for me time to come. In consequence of e scarcity, prices are naturally very gh for the little that is still in the nds of the importer.

Before the war we used to import om Germany young cut beans, a de-ious article, in one-pound and two-und cans. Of course, since the begin-ng of the war we have been unable get even a single tin, as no food oducts are allowed to leave Germany. e are trying to substitute for those erman young cut beans similar goods oduced in Italy and elsewhere, but the ality cannot begin to compare with e German product.

What are known as anchovies are the me fish from which Norwegian sar-nes are made, only spiced and delic-usly prepared. Owing to the enor-ous demand for Norwegian sardines e exporters who were in the habit of eparing these little fish for anchovies r export have been unable to secure y, and consequently practically no orwegian anchovies have reached this arket this year. We were fortunate ough to get some supplies from weden, where a similar fish exists, and here they know how to prepare this tle delicacy in excellent fashion. spite of the scarcity, prices are only very little advanced over previous asons Stockfish is so called because the fish, it is brought on the market looks e a stick. This is codfish, haddock, alfish, lingfish, etc., dried in the open r in the northern part of Norway.

On the coast of Norway, far up in e North, it is a wonderful sight to e all those little mountains covered ith the fish hung out there for drying. tockfish is consumed principally for e Christmas holidays and during the enten season. Owing to the large antities taken by the countries now at ar, prices for stockfish have been out twice as high as they are in or-nary seasons, and the quantities im-rted were somewhat smaller than us-l, as the high prices prevailing, nat-ally, have restricted the consumption some extent.

Garlic, which is one of our principal ticles of import, has had a remark-le career during 1915. Ordinarily, the tle garlic bulb, which is almost a nec-sity to the Latin speaking people, sells from 3 to 5 cents per pound. To-y the best grades of long-keeping rlic sell at about three times that ice. Usually practically all the garlic mes from Italy, but seeing the enor-ous prices which this article was de-anding in the American market, other untries began to open their eyes; they und they also had some garlic, and ey began to ship this garlic to us It me from all over the world, some of came good, some of it bad, but they l competed with the Italian article. ad it not been for this fact we would -day see garlic selling at from 25 to cents per pound, and probably higher. is a peculiar little article, this little rlic bulb, because it only keeps a cer-in time, and garlic taken during the iddle of the summer usually begins to ow and to evaporate by the end of e year; consequently, all this garlic hich has been harvested during the mmer must be sold now, or it will be orthless very shortly. There are a w varieties that are taken, or rather ltivated, in higher altitudes, and those ep for a longer time, and naturally ll at a higher price. At present the arket is well supplied, and prices for e qualities which are not of keeping riety are likely to decline, while prices r the long-keeping variety are surely ing to advance.

Lentils are grown in Russia, but the oduct which we handle is usually imported via Germany. This year, of course, none could be had from either source. We have been successful in securing small shipments from other parts of the world, and lentils which ordinarily sell at about 3 cents per pound are selling to-day at five times that value.

A Happy New Year.

New Premium Scheme Appears in the South.

A rather interesting new premium scheme has broken out in the South, known as the G-B Scheme. It is worked among children, and the following, which is taken from a letter sent out to children, shows the scheme:—

There are nine G-B Merchants in Pensacola.

Work for them by getting your parents and friends to pay cash for the things these G-B Merchants have to sell.

These G-B Merchants will pay in rewards for all of the cash trade you send them.

Uuon request, each G-B Merchant will place your name on a Reward Card at his place of business.

Upon request he will then credit you upon your reward card with every cash purchase made by your parents or friends or by yourself.

Also when cash purchases are made, and credited upon your reward card, the customer will be given a slip on which the amount has been written. This slip goes back to you, so that you may keep track of your credits at the different places of business.

When your credits with all of the G-B Merchants combined equals the amount of cash purchases listed opposite the number of the reward which you have chosen from the catalogue—then you have earned your reward.

All you must do is to get your reward cards from all of the G-B Merchants, add the amounts in order to see that they are correct, and turn them over to any one of the nine G-B Merchants, who will see that you get your reward which you have chosen from the catalogue.

Some G-B Merchants already have catalogues. All will have them in a few days.

Get a catalogue and see how many beautiful and useful rewards there are to work for. You will find bicycles, wireless sets, games, baseball goods and guns, skates, fishing tackle and automobiles, vanity cases, sewing sets, dolls and wrist watches. There are over 1,500 different books; and hundreds of other beautiful and interesting rewards.

There is no chance for anyone to lose. Everyone who has friends to make cash purchases of G-B Merchants gets a reward. And you can keep on earning rewards until you possess everything in the catalogue. Just see that your friends and parents ask to have their cash purchases credited to you by G-B Merchants.

Any G-B Merchant will give you a catalogue of rewards for boys and girls. He will gladly explain its use. There will be a catalogue for every boy and girl in Pensacola.

If you are not already registered with every G-B Merchant, go around at once and ask them to register you on a reward card. No purchase is necessary to register.

The sooner you are registered, the sooner you can begin working for a reward.

There Were Some Wild Fluctuations in Canned Goods in 1915

Tomatoes Nearly Doubled, While Pineapples Dropped a Third. Small Fruits Lower While Beans Much Higher. An Unsettled Year.

We present below the compilation which this paper has for several years presented in the first issue of the year, showing the movement of staple canned goods for the year just ended, the opening, highest, lowest and closing prices. The compilation is by Thomas J. Meehan & Co., the Baltimore brokers. It shows some remarkable fluctuations for 1915. Pineapples declined 33⅓ per cent., peaches declined about 5 per cent., tomatoes advanced about 50 per cent., peas declined about 7½ per cent., berries almost all came down, as indeed did the other small fruits; beans are all higher, baked beans having gone up about 75 per cent.; string beans are lower; pears are slightly lower and corn substantially higher. All prices are f. o. b. Baltimore:—

Any Grocers' Association Can Do This.

Novel Scheme First of Appealing Direct to the Public, Through Local Papers, to Pay Grocery Bills and Second of Taking a Note to Cover All of a Man's Liabilities.

The Hot Springs (Ark.) Retail Merchants' Association is appealing direct to the people of the place, through their local papers, to pay their grocery bills promptly. The association secretary makes the somewhat novel suggestion that delinquents settle by giving a note. Here is an extract of a letter recently published in the local Hot Springs paper by the association secretary:—

> We realize that everybody should be forgiving; we also realize that troubles never come singly and that as a rule when misfortune strikes an individual every merchant who has extended credit wants his money, and some make a special effort to get first money, and such procedure causes well-meaning people to give up and become deadbeats.
> As an offset to all such past experience, the Merchants' Association has decided to forgive as we would be forgiven. Now we can only offer our assistance in helping every person who has unfortunately gotten behind with his bills.
> Our suggestion is, if you owe more than one merchant, go to the Merchants'Association office and give the secretary a list of all the people you owe or what you think you owe. Then the secretary will communicate with each creditor and get a statement of the amount and notify you that you may come in and make a note covering the entire amount, and every time you make a payment you will be given a receipt showing the balance you owe until all is paid, if it takes 10 years. Such payments will be prorated to the creditors, and no matter how small the payment, it will be appreciated, as long as it is the best you can do.
> One of the best ways to start your prosperity is to account to yourself for every dollar you make and spend, and then account to your family and creditors.
> We want you to feel that you have honor and that we respect you for that honor. Now we ask that you give us a chance to show that organized merchants can assist the consumers.
> Arrangements have beeen made to keep the Merchants' Association office open every night that those who are working may go in the evenings and get their affairs straightened out to their own satisfaction. If necessary, an Arbitrating Committee will be present every night to assist in getting all differences settled without court cost to either party.
> Don't let 1916 catch you in debt without knowing just how much you owe and that you will not be sued or worried with collectors and possibly garnishments.
> We wish it thoroughly understood that we are not threatening any person or persons regarding their indebtedness. This December settle-up campaign is suggested that it may be used as a gentle reminder for a new leaf to be turned over before the first of the year, and we will all be ready to start off with and for prosperity.
> We are not going to persecute any person or add cost for revenge. Our system will save cost to the man who stands in his own light by failing or refusing to adjust his indebtedness.

Bill to Fix National Offici Weights for Various Food Staples.

Introduced in House of Represent tives Providing That All Transactio Must Be at the Specified Weigh Would Affect Only Transactio Between Two States.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merch and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C., Jan. 7, 191

A bill has just been introduced the House of Representatives whi is intended to establish an offic weight for a long list of staple co modities. The bill provides that transactions affecting the commo ties mentioned shall be upon t given weights. Naturally the b if it becomes a law, affects o transactions in which the goods into interstate commerce.

The official weights proposed as follows:—

Is the Grocer Letting the Most Profitable Lines Slip Away?

Chicago Contributor Says He Is and Names Milk, Butter, Fruit and Vegetables, Tea, Coffee and Bread.

For several years past certain lines of quick turn over goods have been slipping away from the grocer. It has been largely his fault that they got away from him. Other people have taken these lines and specialized in them and have made enormous profits out of them. The same opportunity was offered the grocers, but through neglect and a failure to understand all that these quick turn over lines meant to him, he permitted the opportunity that knocked at his door to pass him by.

It looks now as though the time may come when he will lose the bread business, and he not only fails to heed the warning, but utterly fails to appreciate how profitable this business is to him, and how he can make use of it to fight the chain store and the big down town stores.

First, the grocer permitted the milk and cream business to get away from him, and right there lost an opportunity for a profitable business and a daily contact with his customers. Butter is fast following milk and cream. The large creamery concerns are already selling a vast amount of butter direct to the consumer off their milk wagons. Fruit and vegetable wagons, owned by large concerns, as well as by small hucksters, are gradually taking this line away from the grocer. Tea and coffee concerns are building up profitable routes in any number of cities throughout the country and now the bread business is headed that way.

In quite a number of cities—Washington, Cleveland, Los Angeles, Buffalo, Troy, Albany, and several smaller cities—the retail baker who sells direct to the consumer off a wagon is commencing to be a formidable competitor of the grocer for this unusually profitable and desirable bread business. One large retail bakery in Los Angeles runs one hundred and twenty-five wagons, and it is estimated that their business amounts annually to from four to five hundred thousand dollars. This means that from eighty to one hundred thousand dollars is annually diverted from the grocer's cash till to the baker's coffers in this one city by this one baking concern. The grocers of Los Angeles are not only losing this profit, but they are also losing the opportunity to make other sales through the loss of daily contact with their customers that this bread business offers. The housewife who buys from a retail wagon is far more susceptible to the chain store and the big down town store than is the woman who buys her bread daily from the neighborhood grocer.

We feel that this is a subject well worth considering. We are taking the liberty of calling your attention to it in the belief that you are, or will be interested.

Again a big addition to producing capacity is necessary in order to take care of the normal growth of Grape-Nuts sales.

"Normal," we say, yet barely short of phenomenal.

This points a quick "moral" to the wide-awake dealer.

Grape-Nuts is a staple. It stands as the most nutritious—the most valuable—the best balanced ready-to-eat cereal food. It builds health, hence friends. That makes it a repeater.

But the story doesn't rest there. Grape-Nuts advertising is everlastingly on the job, bringing new customers to your store.

"There's a Reason"

WITH THE EDITOR

The cost of doing business is always an interesting question, and one which will probably never be settled. Investigators say that the average expense of conducting a retail business is 17 per cent., but they admit that it is almost impossible to make any exact comparison between the expenses of different retailers, because of their different methods of keeping accounts.

The Cost of Doing Business.

The average cost of doing a wholesale grocery business is 6 per cent. One jobber told the writer recently that it cost him only about 4 per cent., but it appeared that he had failed to properly charge up several items which he should have charged up. This sort of thing always makes cost comparisons hard to make and cost conclusions hard to reach. As the National Wholesale Grocers' Association says in its last bulletin:—

> The best evidence that can be offered showing the conditions as they exist in the wholesale grocery business is a comparison of the expense accounts taken from various trial balances. It will be noted that many of the accounts shown are misnamed. In numerous cases the titles do not indicate the class of expense that has been charged to the account. The grouping of the expense by accounts is such that one company will charge an item to a certain account while another company will charge the same item to an entirely different account, making it absolutely impossible to compare the resultant figures. The list of accounts shown below is taken from the books of five companies doing an annual business of from $600,000 to $7,000,000, and it is evident that these companies could not make any comparisons whatever of expenses.
> The first and most important step toward installing uniform accounting methods is to standardize all accounts carried on the books. In order to obtain comparisons every member of the association should charge the same items of expense to the same account. This idea should be carried further than expense accounts and would apply as well to the inventory purchases and income.

Will this ever be done? No. It will not generally be done either by wholesale grocers or by retailers. The bookkeeping systems most firms use are as firmly settled upon them as their habits of dressing. They think they are the best for their business, and while somebody else's method may be the best for his business, it wouldn't apply to theirs at all. So it goes, and for that reason we will probably always be more or less in the dark as to what it costs to do business. The article by the Harvard Bureau, published a couple of weeks ago, is the most useful information on the subject which has as yet appeared.

Not long ago a jobber who needed to know something about the financial standing of a retailer in a small town, wrote a friend who lived there and received the following:

The Hole in the Granary.

> This man is honest to the core, and I believe he has enough ability in his line to make a success, but for some years he has just about been holding his own and every once in a while I hear of claims against him in the hands of our Justice of the Peace. They are always paid without suit, but I do not imagine this lessens the damage to his reputation. I have owed this man a small account three or four months. Have asked him for a bill at least a dozen times and every time he tells me he has been too busy to figure it up, that he expects to get around to it within the next few days, and anyway, he is not worrying about the money.

This man is a type of many who, though honest, possessing adequate ability and doing a living business, are nevertheless always in a hole and usually can never understand why. If the business is a living one, then the trouble is one of two:

1—The owner of the business is trying to do his bookkeeping and billing himself and lacks either the time or the ability to do it; or

2—His whole store system is wrong or he has an incompetent bookkeeper.

There is no excuse whatever for such a man letting himself be sued for small claims before a justice of the peace, or sued for anything, for that matter. He needs a manager and the manager might well take the form of a competent bookkeeper, who would get good money for good service. Or, if the business would not stand that expense, then some one of the standard patent systems would serve.

The National Wholesale Grocers' Association is taking a poll of its members as to whether hams and bacon, cased in the usual canvas, are "in package form." The question is important. If they are in package form, they must bear the net weight on the label, which would be more or less of a nuisance because meats shrink and putting a weight on which would remain forever correct would be a difficult problem. If they are not "in package form," they need not be labeled with the net weight.

Not for Vote.

With all due respect to the association and its members, they might as well save their breath, for this is a question of law, and the courts alone can decide it. It wouldn't be a question at all if legislators had sense enough to say what they mean in their laws.

As a means of providing competent packers for the fruit crop produced in British Columbia, the Department of Agriculture will hold a series of packing schools in the Provinces this winter. As in previous years, the local administration of the packing schools will be placed in the hands of a responsible body, such as the Farmers' Institute or the Fruit Growers' Association.

Honest Fruit Packing.

The Department of Agriculture provides the instructors, pays their expenses and bears the cost of fruit and all other legitimate expenses except that of secretarial work, the rent of buildings, heating and lighting. In addition to the packing work, modern methods and equipment for packing, packing for exhibition and the fruit marks act will be studied.

Pupils who score 75 per cent. in the packing school and put up creditable packs for the Department prizes the following autumn will receive diplomas from the Department.—From a Consular Report.

I wonder whether the packers a taught that good fruit packing i cludes facing—putting a beautif layer on the top and trash unde neath. American packers seem have that idea, although in Flori they go further than they do an where else. There are strawberri coming North from Florida th year, and retailing at $1 to $1. per box, which are absolutely i edible below the first layer. I ha always looked on this as an attem to steal.

Some of the croakers who st refuse to believe that the prese prosperity is mo than the mer flash in the p argue that all t big business we are having is co ing from the war; that it is not any sense a reflection of sou domestic business conditions, a that as soon as the war ceases, it is bound to do in the not dist future, all the big business will stantly disappear, and we will more stagnant than ever.

As to Good Business After the War.

It seems to me that there is no ing to this at all. True it is t the bulk of the enormous busin in most lines is due to the war, a that if the war hadn't come the ders would not have come eitl And very likely when the war e this business will not stay. the millions of money which h come, and will come to this cou from those orders will stay. I as if the domestic business of country had received additi capital—new blood. With thi is bound to go ahead with n vigor than it had before, even i a little while the industries have nothing but purely dom business.

This new blood is bound to into everybody's veins sooner later. It comes first to the

Worth Reading and Remembering

Trained clerks sell more goods, satisfy more customers, make fewer mistakes, and help increase trade and profits.

The best way to train clerks is to hold a school.

Make your meetings informal; invite clerks to criticise anything pertaining to the business. Get them to offer suggestions.

Specialty Manufacturers' Issue Address to Retailers. Cigar Dealers Want Stevens Bill. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, January 7, 1916.

The American Specialty Manufacturers' Association has issued a New Year's greeting to the retail trade of the United States, over the signature of president-elect Carl A. Lautz. It is sufficiently worthy to reproduce here:—

December 30, 1915.

To the Retail Grocers of the United States:—

The American Specialty Manufacturers extend a most cordial New Year's Greeting and the compliments of this joyous season to their friends of the associated industry of retail grocers.

No industry can be successful or satisfactory where mutual confidence, good faith and fair dealing are absent. In striving to perfect such mutual confidence, good faith and fair dealing in the merchandising of grocery specialties, the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association is equally promoting the best interests of the retail grocer and the specialty manufacturer.

I venture the assertion that there is no greater or more valuable a friend of the American retail grocer than the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association. Why? Because it is the object of this association to standardize, stabilize, perfect to the highest degree of efficiency and render as profitable and as satisfactory as possible, to all parties concerned—the grocery specialty business.

The stamp of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association stands for a square deal, and for sound business conduct for the retail grocer, ensures a genuine specialty order, fairly and efficiently taken, given and filled, affords protection against imposition and secures a satisfactory and profitable transaction.

An industry cannot prosper when its component parts are each, respectively, striving to gain an unfair advantage over or impose upon the other. Immeasurable and just prosperity awaits that industry, on the other hand, which adopts a principle that the greatest efficiency and good of each is the greatest efficiency and good of all, that the enlightened and sincere co-operation of all to standardize the business transactions of the industry is to the greatest benefit of each.

It cannot be questioned that the welfare of the great grocery commerce of this nation is measured by the welfare of the retail grocer, and that upon the welfare of the grocery trade depends to such a considerable degree the welfare of the nation. And this association is earnestly and actively working to promote the best interests of the retail grocer by encouraging efficient, fair and sound commerce in grocery specialties.

We wish for every retail grocer greater prosperity and happiness than ever before in the New Year. We offer our sincere appreciation for your co-operation in the past and ask your continued co-operation in the future.

The National Cigar Leaf Tobacco Association has sent a strong letter to the chairman of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, urging that the committee recommend the passage of the Stevens bill, which would allow the manufacturer of trademarked articles to fix the retail price. A part of the letter is as follows:—

> In no industry has habitual price cutting produced such widespread disastrous results as in that devoted to the manufacture of cigars. It is the chief weapon of monopoly and has been employed most effectively in crushing out the retailer and the independent cigar manufacturer and in seriously injuring the cigar leaf grower, packer and distributor.
> The business of manufacturing cigars, especially those selling at the popular price of 5 cents each, is today conducted on an exceedingly narrow margin and in the case of many establishments is positively

Why a Manufacturer Should Be Permitted to Fix the Retail Price of His Product

Views of Various Believers in This Doctrine Who Offer Them as Arguments for the Pending Stevens Bill.

[The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has obtained and will from time to time present a series of statements by various well-known persons who believe that the manufacturer should have the right to tell the retailer what price he must get for the manufacturer's product. All of the views which will be presented can be taken as arguments for the pending Stevens Bill, which seeks to give a manufacturer that right.—Ed.]

No. 10.—By John A. Lake, Retail Grocer, and First Vice-President of the Michigan State Retail Grocers' and General Merchants' Associations.

NOTE.

Mr. Lake testified before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives in favor of the Stevens bill. His testimony became really an argument between himself and the various members of the committee as to whether the retail prices of food products should ever be fixed by the manufacturer. The argument was so intensely interesting and so closely touches the business of the readers hereof that we have obtained a stenographic report and here present it. It is not only intensely interesting, but gives a vivid glimpse of the feeling of the members of the Congressional Committee on the subject of price regulation.—Ed.

Mr. Decker. Where the cost of materials and labor, etc., does fluctuate, then there must be a fluctuating in price?

Mr. Lake. There must be a fluctuating price; yes, sir.

Mr. Decker. In other words, the law of supply and demand holds in your business the same as in anybody else's?

Mr. Lake. It certainly does.

Mr. Decker. Would not this proposition you are asking here to be passed then in a measure tend to change that law of supply and demand?

Mr. Lake. I do not understand that it would in the least. I do not think that any manufacturer who had the interest and life of his own business at heart would be foolish enough to come under a copyrighted or trade-marked article with a fixed price if it was going to put him out of business in one month or in one year, and he could not exist under this if he did not give a good value to the consumer.

Mr. Decker. Would that not depend upon the competition of other manufacturers?

Mr. Lake. I think the law makes provision for that, that a man having a monopoly, a trust, or anything like that, cannot possibly come under this, and, as I say, I would approve of a department here that passes on these very carefully before giving any company a right to put out anything under this law whereby the consumer did not get value received for his money. I would oppose such a law. We do not want a law that skins the consumer. We want a just law for the disposition of goods to the consumer. That is what we are asking for. A law that will not harm the consumer, but yet will put business on a legitimate basis and help to make better merchants.

Mr. Decker. I cannot see yet, if this is a good thing for one article, why, then, is it not a good thing for just as many articles as you can make it apply to?

Mr. Lake. Yes; I agree with you there, if value is given.

Mr. Decker. Do you not reach this situation? The tendency, at least, would be to do away with the incentive between distributing agencies, such as grocery stores and drug stores, to lessen the cost of distribution. For instance, if every manufacturer in the country manufacturing every article, we will say, could make a fixed price and turn it to the distributor at a fixed price, what incentive would there be for that distributor to economize the methods of distribution; to get his rent reasonably; to see that his work was done in the most efficient and economical way; that his deliveries were made in the most expeditious manner and by the most economical method, to the end that he can run his business on a competitive basis and get a good business and at the same time get the trade of the public because of his economies and efficiency?

Mr. Lake. My answer to that is this: That a good location, a good business, a good delivery system, and good men are the only basis upon which any modern business can succeed.

Mr. Decker. Why will that not protect you in this case just as far as you can be protected by fixing prices?

Mr. Lake. In the first place I will take this as an illustration. The policy of my firm in dealing with the public has never been to see how low we could sell goods to the public. It has been to give the greatest value possible for a fixed or a certain price. When we buy our prunes, if we are selling them at 15 cents, we buy the best we can sell at 15 cents, and we do not sell two or three kinds out of the same drawer. We try to follow that out in all of our business. We pay our men good salaries, because they are worth it, and because a high-salaried man is the cheaper man of the two, and we want laws that will help to continue our business along that line.

Mr. Decker. I venture the suggestion that in all probability, following that method, you are successful in your business?

Mr. Lake. I believe we are, sir. I have no question about it at all. It has been our policy from the time we began business.

Mr. Decker. Are the prices on such commodities as you speak of now, the Ivory soap, for instance, are they fixed to you by the manufacturer? Can you not cut the prices on Ivory soap?

Mr. Lake. We can, if we see fit.

Mr. Decker. You have got along all right under the present system?

Mr. Lake. And I can continue to get along all right.

Mr. Decker. Do you know of many reputable merchants who have not got along pretty well?

Mr. Lake. Yes; I can name lots of them. We have been fortunate in never having unprincipled competition next us in cut-rate goods.

Mr. Barkley. You do not want one next to you?

Mr. Lake. Not if it can be avoided.

Mr. Barkley. And that is why you want this law passed?

Mr. Lake. If he did come in and cut on inferior articles—

Mr. Barkley (interposing). If those inferior articles were trade-marked articles, he could not cut on them under this law, could he?

Mr. Lake. He could not cut on them under this law. He would have to make a profit on his service on those articles just as he would have on his poorer goods.

Mr. Barkley. Although he might sell it at two-thirds of its registered price and still make a profit on it, because the manufacturer told him not to cut?

Mr. Lake. I am afraid you have the wrong idea about the groceryman's profit.

Mr. Barkley. From the rate I pay for groceries I have a pretty exaggerated idea of their profits.

Mr. Lake. Perhaps you are dealing at a bargain store.

Mr. Barkley. No; there is no bargain in it. Take the Keencutter safety razor, for instance, manufactured by the Simmons Hardware Co. It is marked on the box $3.50. Now the Simmons Hardware Co. gets from the retailer what it asks for that safety razor, whatever it may be?

Mr. Lake. Yes, sir.

Mr. Barkley. The wholesaler gets his price when he sells to the retailer. Now, what interest has the wholesaler in what happens to that razor after the retailer gets it, whether he gives it away, throws it in the river, or sells it at exactly the price he paid for it, or makes a profit of 5, 10 or 20 per cent. on it?

Mr. Lake. In the first place, he cannot keep his razor in the hands of the best dealers unless the merchant through whose hands it passes will take a reasonable margin of profit for his services.

Mr. Barkley. If the manufacturer gets his price for it and keeps on getting his price for it, then he can continue keeping up the grade of the razor, can he not?

Mr. Lake. He can, provided he can keep on getting his price for it.

Mr. Barkley. He does not have to sell it unless he does get his price for it?

Mr. Lake. That is all right

Mr. Barkley. As long as there is a demand for his razor he can get his price for it, can he not?

Mr. Lake. As long as there is a demand for it, but that demand ceases when that article does not yield margin enough to keep it up to his highest competitor's standard?

Mr. Barkley. What do you call a poor merchant?

Mr. Lake. A merchant who will sell that razor at cost and turn around and charge you two prices for the next article you buy.

Mr. Barkley. If he charges two prices for the next article I buy and I get skinned on it, I will not trade with him again.

Mr. Lake. You may not know it. It may be an article with which you are unfamiliar, but you do know the price of that razor.

Mr. Decker. If he got skinned that way and never found it out, would there not also be danger, if you allowed the manufacturers to fix their prices on down to the consumer on these proprietary articles, would there not be danger of the consumers getting skinned for a long time that way and not know it? For instance, take the good old Owl cigar. That was sold a long while, and I have been told by people used to smoking good cigars that it used to be an awfully fine cigar. But I have heard people say that it is not as good as it used to be. How long could they sell those cigars at that fixed price before the people knew they were getting an inferior article?

Mr. Lake. If I could judge a good cigar, which I cannot, as well as I can judge some articles in the grocery business, it would not be very long.

Mr. Decker. I will not say that is so about the Owl cigar, because I smoke the Ofty.

Mr. Lake. I take this ground, gentlemen, and I wish to thank you for your time, but the majority of articles in a grocery store could never come under this law. It would be the smaller number.

Mr. Decker. What I am getting at is, is it not a fact that a good many of these evils could be done away with by State laws against fraudulent advertising?

Mr. Lake. A good many of them can.

The pure food laws, the good advertising laws, the good interstate commerce laws are the best things for the people and the reliable merchant that can possibly happen, and it is those things we are asking for.

Mr. Decker. But you are asking here to do away with the law of supply and demand?

Mr. Lake. I am not. Leave the law of supply and demand where it is.

Mr. Decker. The law of supply and demand does not recognize any fixed price by law.

Salesmen versus the Mail.

Did you ever stop to think how much money you can save by buying coffee and tea by mail? You will be surprised at the difference at the end of the year. Of course, it is important that you deal with a responsible house, but you know all coffees and teas can be matched, and when once matched the types can always be kept on hand so that you can obtain the same grade each time. Messrs. Duryee & Barwise, of 5 Greenwich street, New York, specialize selling teas and coffee by mail.—Ad

A Romance in Business

Twenty-five years ago—less than the e of a single invention in these days progress—Willoughby M. McCor-ck and two girls began bottling flavor-g extracts and drug specialties in a all way. They bottled them so well, d the market expanded so naturally consequence, that the business had grow. In a year Mr. McCormick was ined by his brother, Roberdau A. Mc-rmick. Then it became advisable to corporate to perpetuate the family me, which was done in Maine about ne years ago, with a capital stock of 00,000. Reincorporation under the ws of Maryland followed, with the pitalization increased to $500,000, hich does not nearly represent the lue of the business.

To-day with a five-story building, vering a floor space of more than three res, the firm has not enough room handle its business and has to pro-de outside storage. Where Mr. Mcormick could have carried his original ock in a suit case, to-day ships canot bring raw material rapidly enough feed the machinery which is dumping e output of this remarkable concern to every nook and corner of the untry.

In a comfortable little lecture room, the third floor, 57 salesmen from all rts of the country—two of them from an Francisco, three from Philadelphia, ur from New York City, and others om chief points of competition—have en spending the past week attending nferences addressed by experts. They ve been learning the bigness of this altimore enterprise, digging into deils of quality, prices, packing, markets, mpeting methods. It is a plan typical McCormick energy. At the close of very year these salesmen, constantly owing in numbers, come together and mpare notes. One visiting the plant d inhaling the rich odors from many nds might imagine in comparison the aders in spices who met in the marts of the East when their goods were ken by caravans to Rome and Greece, d later into England. As no one of ic traders of the days before the Gauls tought of plunging ships, snorting ains, automobile relays, perhaps none f the trained salesmen sitting in con-rence above Pratt street think of the eroplane-freight of to-morrow, but eir business is with the future as well s the present, and the story of the ast is one that makes them look far head to expansion of the future.

Willoughby McCormick, president of ie company, is a man who might be 45

f 20. His age makes no difference.
When he and his two girls started put-ng things in bottles a quarter of a entury ago he was a very young man.
ow, as the business has expanded, he as found time and opportunity to be ctive in many things, all of which have ie good of community as their ob-ective. For instance, he was one of ie founders of the Drug Exchange of altimore, which until it became an im-ortant section of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association, exercised n independent function of great service the trade. He was also one of the rganizers of the Flavoring Extract Manufacturers' Association of the United States, which is one of the most important of all the national trade organizations. His penchant for organizing carried him into the launching of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association, of which he was the first vice-president, and he has been a member of the directorate and Executive Board ever since it started. Another national position is in the directorate of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, in connection with which he has plenty of opportunity to follow his hobby as chairman of the special Committee on Uniform Drug and Food Regulations. Among his local activities there may be mentioned that in addition to being a director of the First National Bank of Baltimore, he is also president of the Baltimore Commercial Bank, which was recently organized with a capital of $500,000 and surplus of $100,000. This bank is peculiarly intended for the use of business interests of Baltimore and the Southland, and has a big field to cover.

Two of the firm's hobbies are food purity and domestic science, or the science of cookery. Under the president's direction the firm has published a splendid manual of cookery, full of recipes from the best cooks of Maryland and the Virginias, in which dishes are preserved from our Colonial period—dishes which gave the South the gastronomic championship of the world. At least, let no wise man intimate that other cooking is better, for of that and its useful women the South is proud. The book is full of useful general information, too, such as weights and measures, time table, marketing hints, rules for choosing foods and things worth knowing in the Children's Corner. Bee Brand spices and Banquet Brand teas are recommended—and why not? For it is a matter of record that every single product of the McCormick house exhibited at the Panama Exposition won the gold medal.

In a recent interview, Mr. McCormick said: "Take spices and extracts. One of the things we have to fight hardest against is the habit of buying compounds for extracts from old women and cripples who peddle from door to door. As an example, there is Vanillin, which is made of cloves or coal tar; there is Coumarin, made of deer tongue or coal tar. They are both synthetic compounds, absolutely no good except as imitations and to sell from door to door, and they are palmed off on any number of women who do not understand the imposition and allow them to be substituted for real Vanilla extract.

"That suggests the pure food law. I don't know whether you've studied the pure food laws or not, but if you haven't, look them up. The intention is all right, but it doesn't go far enough. For instance, the pure foods law says that vanilla extract must have 13 ounces of vanilla beans to the gallon. We use 16 of the very best vanilla beans. Where the law falls down is that it does not emphasize quality. It just gives you weights and measures. To explain, there are five grades of vanilla beans, running all the way from $1.50 to $6 per pound in cost. What makes the difference in price? Why, quality, of course—goodness of the bean. But if you use 13 ounces of beans at $1.50 to each gallon of extract your product is just as pure, under the law, as that of the man who uses 16 ounces of beans at $6. Now, what we are after is quality, which in itself insures purity with proper treatment. The law makes no mention of quality, provides no protection in that respect."

The McCormicks are educational in their work, too. In addition to the Manual of Cookery, they have current publications, including one booklet on "Tea: Its Early History," and another on "Spices: A Textbook for Teachers." Both books are thoroughly illustrated, and the textbook on spices has had the unusual compliment paid it of being bought in large quantities for school purposes by such schools as the Pratt Institute.

A journey through the McCormick house would pay anyone who desired swift transportation from the humdrum modern business life to the atmosphere of the Far East, with its romance and fragrance. As has been said before, it is a far leap from the waters of the lowly front of Baltimore, twentieth century, to the Kingdom of the Sounds of Odors, where every delight wafted to the nostrils is a song or a poem. In that kingdom there is much machinery, but it never quite displaces the fancy that is there for any quick imagination or the flavor of the Orient.

On the first floor are the offices, the first inclosure being an information bureau, the second and third offices of the Messrs. McCormick, then the general offices, stenographers and mailing rooms; back of that great storage rooms, filled with tea and imported raw material for spices and extracts. There is on this floor, too, a profit sharing department, where retailers and jobbers reap the benefits of their energy by gifts of ascending value. This is for retailers and jobbers only and does not extend to the consumer.

The first room entered is the filling room, where containers are filled by machinery with various grades of teas. There are several rotary machines which at the same time weigh and fill containers, passing them on by a belt conveyor to girls who rapidly handle the finishing touches. Next comes the extract department, where first an automatic labeler turns out 14,400 bottles a day, all properly marked and ready filled before labeling for contents. These are then passed on to rotary filling machines fed from a tank on the next floor above, through a pipe system, with any one of the many extracts manufactured by the McCormick concern. On the revolving table of the machine the bottles stand, coming each in its turn under nozzles, which pour contents into 130 gross a day of two-ounce bottles.

Back of this room there is the assembling room, where all the products are brought together to be sent to the packer, and by him dispatched in chutes to the shipping department and dispatched.

Another room contains more than a dozen grinding machines, successors of the old-fashioned revolving stones and designed to keep in all the oils formerly lost in grinding spices. Before the grinding machines came into use any pungent product being treated would send a thick aroma into the free air, which was just so much loss. All this is now saved, and with the grinders pepper could be handled in any quantities and an operator standing at the machine would hardly detect the odor.

In the next room there are vacuum cleaners for seeds, showing up brilliantly in their scrupulously spotless red enamel. Every seed and spice that goes through the mills is first thoroughly cleaned, as are also all the teas and herbs, so that when the raw material finally reaches the consumer the finished product is in the cleanest possible condition. In another part of the building there are dusting machines, and in every case all the products being cleaned pass over magnets, which attract and hold any metallic substance that may accidentally have found its way in, during handling.

Passing the printing plant, equipped completely to handle all sorts of incidental publications, the visitor reaches the stairway to the third floor, and ascending finds rotary machines and belt conveyors actually using brains to do the work of many hands. There is a machine, for instance, in two parts that does everything but sell the product. In one end a boy feeds flat cardboard knock-down boxes. The machine grips, bends, folds, pastes all but one open end, and passes the box down a belt under a hopper, which automatically feeds the exact measure of contents. Then the conveyor continues, carries the package around to the second half of the machine, and that half takes the package, closes and secures it and delivers it to the packer.

You have seen pepper and bought it, delivered by the grocer in neat tin boxes, but you probably never realized how a machine weighs, fills, caps and assorts with unerring accuracy. Here, again, are rotary machines, the tables carrying many boxes under the hoppers for filling and passing on to inspectors, who check, weigh and inspect the contents. From the machine each tiny box goes by conveyor to the next man, who puts each under a stamping arm, which fastens the tin lid on securely. Then up a bucket belt and down a chute to the next room, where girls pack them, one girl handling as many as 20,000 cans a day. The first machine will fold, paste, fill and lock 15,000 pasteboard cartons in a day. The second and third machines will weigh, fill, cap and deliver, respectively, 40,000 and 30,000 lithographed tins a day.

Mc. CORMICK & CO'S EXECUTIVE AND SALES FORCE DECEMBER 1915

In the handling of the perishable stuff, such as mayonnaise dressing, inventive genius has discovered an instantaneous and effective device by which a machine for capping bottles that have been filled will at the same time exhaust all air. There is no limit on the time that such packing would preserve the dressing.

With such a house, and such a record, the salesmen who meet annually can go out from Baltimore to all quarters of the country and sell goods that have upon them the stamp of excellence.

And the house of McCormick, wherever the Bee Brand and Banquet Brand brighten the counters of the dealer or peep from the shelves of milady's kitchen, is proud of the fact that its own brand is "Baltimore."—Advt.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

There has been no change in tea during the week. The situation is healthy and steady to firm, sales being good and holders fairly firm in their ideas. Buyers seem to be willing to pay the price. No change can be quoted for the week.

Coffee.

The coffee market shows no change during the week, the situation being still dull and heavy. There is a noticeable lack of demand at the present time. Buyers are taking only the coffee which they really need. Prices are about unchanged, Santos grades being somewhat weaker than Rio 7s. Mild coffees are quiet and about unchanged. The market in green steady. Java and Mocha unchanged and dull.

Sugar.

The sugar market has remained about unchanged for the week, the only movement being a slight easing off of raws, which are perhaps a sixteenth below the price quoted a week ago. The outlook for the sugar market is lower, although refined is unchanged for the week. All refiners are quoting 5.85 to 5.95 cents for granulated. Domestic beet granulated is quoted at 5.75 cents in Eastern markets. The consumptive demand for sugar is good.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose remains unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is seasonably active at ruling quotations. Sugar syrup is dull, except for manufacturing, and prices are still on a high basis. Molasses unchanged and quiet; prices high.

Fish.

There has been no particular change in the fish market during the week. There is some demand, but so far as mackerel is concerned it is being interfered with by the very high prices. Cod, hake and haddock fairly active at unchanged prices. Salmon shows no change for the week and light request. Domestic sardines have advanced and most holders are now asking $2.50 in a large way, f. o. b. for quarter oils. Goods can still be bought, however, below that. Imported sardines scarce and quiet, on account of the high prices A full history of the imported fish market for 1915 will be found in another column.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are practically unchanged for the week. The market for Maryland 3s in a large way, f. o. b., is $1.05, although some holders are willing to take $1.02½, while others are holding off for $1.10. The situation is undoubtedly very strong. Demand fair. Corn is steady to firm and moderately active Peas inclined to be heavy without change for the week Apples are on the same basis as for several months past; demand fair California canned goods are showing some activity. It has developed that about the only thing of which packers have any surplus is peaches, and even in these the assortments are not running very good. Small Eastern staple canned goods are unchanged, the only thing of note being that spinach is somewhat firmer.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are inclined to be a little easy both on the coast and in the East, and the packers report that they could sell all they had, to go to Europe, if they could get the ships to send them in, but they claim it is impossible to do this, and it is this which is making the market easier. The consumptive demand for prunes is fair. Peaches and apricots are unchanged for the week and in quiet demand. Raisins show no change for the week. The situation is steady to firm. The demand fair. Currants have taken a slump of a cent or two a pound from the highest point. This was because a shipment got in too late for the holidays, but is now available. No change in any other dried fruits.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are about unchanged on spot, but the market is much firmer in Michigan and anything to come forward would cost a substantial fraction more than $4 per bushel. Marrows have eased off slightly on account of lack of demand, but the outlook is rather strong. California limas are unchanged and quiet. Green and Scotch peas on spot unchanged and dull.

Butter.

There is an active demand for all grades of butter, and the receipts are increasing to some extent, but are cleaning up every day. Prices show decline for the week 1 to 2 cents per pound, owing to the increased receipts. The market is healthy at the decline, with no radical change in sight.

Eggs.

The egg market shows steady prices for fresh eggs at a decline of 1 cent since the last report. The demand is cleaning up everything on arrival and the stocks in storage are being rapidly reduced. It looks like a continued good consumptive demand, with generally healthy conditions.

Cheese.

The cheese market is very firm, with a moderate consumptive demand and a large export demand. Stocks are considerably lighter than a year ago If there is any change it will probably be an advance.

Provisions.

Everything in the smoked meat line is firm, but unchanged for the week, and with a moderate consumptive demand. Pure and compound lard are steady and unchanged, with a good demand for pure lard, but a very light demand for compound. This is because the latter is relatively too high when compared with the former. Barreled pork, canned meats and dried beef are all unchanged and in light demand.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Wheat and Flour.

During the month of December the wheat market advanced 20 cents a bushel and is now at the same level as a year ago this date. We have contrasted the outlook of to-day with that of 12 months ago, pointing out that at that time we had in prospect what has since materialized in a harvest in North America of 1,347,000,000 bushels, whilst to-day there is every indication of short crops for 1916, both in the United States and Canada.

If the European war is to last another year the prospect for a short wheat crop in 1916 is not an alluring one for the hungry millions in Europe.

If we are to have higher prices for wheat, this, coupled with the high cost of transportation, will make the cost of flour almost prohibitive by the time it reaches the consumer. But at double its present price it has more nutritive value than any possible substitute.

With the 1915 crops in the United States and Canada exceeding the 1914 crop by 306,000,000, the visible supply is only 15,000,000 greater than a year ago.

We see nothing in the situation to cause a decline and confidently expect higher prices. We have discussed in our letters every viewpoint, so it is unnecessary for us to repeat here the reason for our belief, except to say that the greatest factors that will make for higher prices are the condition of the winter wheat now in farmers' bins, the prospect of a small crop of wheat to be harvested in 1916 and the immense foreign demand.

Spices.

The market continues quite active in all positions. Ocean freights continue to advance. Supplies here are unusually short and as we have stated heretofore, very high prices will likely rule over the early part of 1916.

Pepper.—On account of increasing consuming demand and steep advances in ocean freights, all markets have advanced sharply. This applies to all grades. There apparently is no relief in sight at this time. High prices are now ruling all over the world. White peppers are also firm in price and higher prices will rule.

Red Peppers.—Getting very scarce and high and prices are likely to continue for some time.

Cloves.—Quite active and in large consuming demand. Higher prices are likely to rule.

Pimento (Allspice).—While in active demand, the price of this article is slightly easier.

Nutmegs.—Stocks have been heavily reduced. The general tendency is up-

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

We Have It In Cans.—It beats all how often some clerks forget to use their wits. And how many good sales are lost simply on account of allowing your brain to lie dormant.

We repeat that success depends more on good thinking—on "using your head"—than upon any other qualification.

A woman asks for a half peck spinach. It's sold out, not another word does he say, and yet there is piled in the cellar and represented on the shelves, 10, 20 or 50 dozen, as the case may be, in No. 3 cans, solid packed, large leaf, gritless spinach, ready for the table.

It's a sorry specimen of a "dead one," and yet it's constantly happening. When it does happen within the hearing of one of your managers, accept this bit of advice—"hold your breath till you count 7," in case there should be a dear, devout church sister near you.

But the snappy clerks are in the majority and they're on their job. We would be disappointed to think you would allow your customer to go out without a can of nice dark red beets when she came in for a bunch or a couple of quarts and you didn't have either of the last two. We would put you down in Class 5 should you have a call for a pound of lentils (which are practically out of the market) and you forgot to bring along a can of lentils.

On the other hand, you might become eligible to Class 1 the day you expect your cranberries to arrive every minute but in the meantime, "Madam," you say "why not try a package of our new evaporated cranberries? Saves a lot of picking over and washing, and the price in proportion is no higher."

She wanted cheap cooking butter and he recommended his best butterine. No she wouldn't use it—wouldn't allow it in the house, even.

But she walked out with a pound just the same.

How did he do it?

He said to her, "Do you see that lady out there by the door with the brown velvet suit and white furs?" She says her. "Well," said he, "she talked just like you did and I said to her, 'I know all about the making of butter and butterine. I have done all the buying of it and all the selling of it in this store for over seven years and what I recommend to you, you can bank on.' She's a regular customer now."

And so he thanked the self-willed one for her confidence and her purchase.

Moral:—Use you head.

vard. Import cost is higher to-day han selling prices here.

Mace.—Continues very scarce and in ctive demand. Lower prices are hardly robable.

Cassias.—All grades very active and ending upward. Spot stocks here are ow very short. There is insufficient n hand for the actual consumption ver the next three months of this year.

Gingers.—Slowly but steadily advanc- ng and visible supplies are short for ormal needs.

Tapiocas.—Have been affected very nuch by the steep advance in ocean reights. Very high prices are now rul- ng and advances are probable.

Paprikas.—While in fair demand, ractically unchanged in price. All rades will sell well over the next two three months.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—Supplies of mus- rds are short. The demand will soon e on the increase. Celery unchanged. 'oppy and caraway slightly easier weet herbs all in urgent demand at ractically unchanged prices.

THE NEW YORK LETTER

precarious. Any invasion of the manufacturers' exceedingly small profits to assist independent retailers in their effort to meet monopolistic price cutters is out of the question and yet the ultimate effects of price cutting must be borne by these same manufacturers.

So far as legitimate retailers are concerned, their business is comparatively small, as the public convenience requires the maintenance of a large number of stores so that the cost of operating these little establishments is of necessity charged against a comparatively insignificant volume of business. The profits of the average retailer of cigars and tobacco are so small that usually the advent of a price cutting dealer in their vicinity means the speedy closing of their stores.

The consumer has an important stake in this matter, for the maintenance of quality is a prime consideration with him and this is only practicable where the manufacturer receives a fair price for his goods and the retailer a reasonable profit on his operations. If the cigar business to-day were turned over to a few large concerns which habitually resort to price cutting, consumers would find themselves restricted to the output of a very small number of large manufacturers and they would be unable to purchase the best brands of goods which are now widely distributed through a large number of small independent stores.

Summarized Market Conditions.

Tea quiet and unchanged. Market conditions generally satisfactory.—Coffee still heavy, although the feeling toward the close of the week is slightly firmer, owing to firmer conditions in Brazil. The demand is confined to actual wants. Prices the same as last week, but if certain advances in freight rates are maintained there may be slight fractional advances in Brazils.—Sugar easier all along the line. Raws are quoted around 4½ cents and refined ranges from 5.85 to 5.95.—Canned tomatoes still high at prices about like last week. Demand light. Future tomatoes offered at 80 cents; are not being taken very largely. Other canned goods entirely unchanged. Fancy corn firm.—Salmon firm and unchanged. Domestic sardines higher and wanted.—Prunes unchanged for the week with demand very dull; somewhat better feeling toward the close of the week.—Apricots and peaches steady to firm and quiet.—Wheat firmer with the recent advance apparently stopped for the moment.—Flour unchanged on last week's basis. Demand light with buyers mostly bearish.

Three Indispensable Storekeeping Tables.

Cincinnati, Ohio, Jan. 4, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Several weeks ago you published a table telling how to figure profits. I saved the copy for quite a while, but have now mislaid it. Can you reprint it?

Respectfully,
A. E. McCUSKER.

We gladly reproduce the tables this correspondent refers to; they are exceedingly useful. The following table shows the percentage of cost which must be added to make a certain percentage of profit. For instance, if your cost of doing business is 17 per cent., and you add that to your cost, your gross profit would be 14.53 per cent.:—

Add % to Cost	To Make % Profit on Sales	Add % to Cost	To Make % Profit on Sales
1	.99	26	20.63
2	1.96	27	21.26
3	2.91	28	21.88
4	3.85	29	22.48
5	4.76	30	23.08
6	5.66	31	23.66
7	6.54	32	24.24
8	7.41	33	24.81
9	8.27	33⅓	25.00
10	9.09	34	25.37
11	9.91	35	25.93
12	10.71	36	26.47
12½	11.11	37	27.01
13	11.50	37½	27.27
14	12.28	38	27.54
15	13.04	39	28.06
16	13.79	40	28.57
16⅔	14.29	41	29.08
17	14.53	42	29.58
18	15.25	43	30.07
19	15.97	44	30.56
20	16.67	45	31.03
21	17.36	46	31.51
22	18.03	47	31.97
23	18.70	48	32.43
24	19.35	49	32.88
25	20.00	50	33⅓

The percentage of profit should always be figured on the selling price and not on the cost.

The table which follows is for figuring net profits:—

Below appears still another, for finding the selling price of any article:—

A Medicine Scheme.

Waynesboro, Pa., Jan. 3, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Do you know anything about the Apex Medicine Mfg. Co., Cumberland, Md.? Would it be a good investment for a merchant to take $100 worth of stock? They expect to incorporate March 1st. Have some stock for sale. Merchants of Virginia, West Virginia, Delaware, New Jersey and Pennsylvania are to be interested in it. Merchants only.

Respectfully yours,
F. R. FENNINGER.

We should not invest in the stock of any patent medicine company. The enterprise is too hazardous and has too much competition. Moreover, the restrictions surrounding the sale of patent medicines are being constantly tightened, and from now on any patent medicine business is going to be very far from what it once was.

Fattening Oysters on Water Forbidden.

Inspectors of the Department of Agriculture in giving special attention to the heavy traffic in oysters during the holiday season, have found that it is the practice of some dealers to add fresh water to shucked oysters in such a way as to greatly increase the size of the oysters. The oyster when brought in contact with fresh water for several hours will "drink" or absorb a considerable quantity of the water and will increase in size in exact proportion to the amount of water which it "drinks." As oysters are usually sold by the pint or quart, any increase in their size, due to the addition of water, enables the dealer to fill the pint or quart measure with a smaller number of oysters. In order to increase the size, oysters must be soaked in fresh water or water that is only slightly salty. They will not "drink" enough of the salt water in which they are grown to increase materially in bulk. Nor will oysters increase in bulk to any extent from being washed in fresh water if they are allowed to remain for only the few minutes necessary to cleanse them. This is adulteration under the Federal Food and Drugs Act and offenders will be prosecuted.

Your percentage of net profit is represented by the figure at the junction of the two columns

Explanation: If your cost of doing business is 15 per cent of cost, as one rules and you mark a line at 25 per cent above cost your net profit is 5 per cent on sales. If your cost of doing business is 18 per cent and you mark a line at 60 per cent above cost your net profit is 19⅓ per cent on sales. Compare at left to see.

United States Chamber of Commerce Says We Are Going to Have a Banner Business Year.

Sees Things Booming All Over the United States, Partly Because of the War. Big Orders for Most Merchandise at High Prices.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
January 7, 1916.

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States has issued a statement during the week which is in substance a strong prophecy that 1916 will be an unprecedentedly prosperous year in all business. A portion of the statement is reproduced:—

The outlook for business for the first four months of 1916 is in striking contrast to that prevailing this time last year. There are localities where much caution and conservatism yet remain, and the influence of high prices for the future further accentuates this caution, because dealers feel that high prices will curtail buying by the consumer. Broadly speaking, it may be said that the spirit of optimism and hopefulness prevails to a degree that has not been apparent for nearly a decade and the general belief and expectation is for such prosperity during 1916 as will recompense the people of this country for all their past misfortunes.

The adverse effects of the conflict in Europe still prevails in some sections, though to a very much less extent than at this time last year. There are still scattered fears of the possibility of this country being involved in the gigantic strife, but as against this the large portion of the people are paying less and less attention to the war and more and more are concentrating their thoughts and efforts on domestic matters. Beyond this is the striking fact that the influence of the war at present as a whole is more favorable than adverse, because of the tremendous impetus it has given to certain lines of manufacturing, especially east of the Alleghanies, and likewise to many agricultural products. This influence is a material factor in the present high price of sheep, cattle, wool, grain, and of the products of leather, steel, iron, copper, brass, lead and zinc or spelter. Much of the prosperity in the grain-raising sections is due to the fact that the farmer is selling freely because of remunerative figures for his product, and there seems to be no manner of doubt but that these prices will decline materially in case of peace.

Railroads report better business as a whole, and railroad shops are employing more and more men. Manufacturing has taken on new life through the whole country and in almost every branch. Abnormal activities prevail largely in the East and in certain portions of the Central West because of heavy orders from abroad for war purposes. This has created a temporary lack of raw material in many lines not otherwise affected by war orders. There is much consequent decrease in unemployment. Prices are being advanced everywhere by manufacturers in all lines and they are continually being flooded with orders. Automobile factories and flour mills are exceedingly busy. This is likewise true of potteries, cement factories and furniture.

Merchandise stocks in the hands of the retailers vary from light to normal—the percentage being, by a small proportion, in favor of normal. Orders for future shipments in the spring are being more generally placed than for some years past, thus showing the confidence of the dealers in the immediate future.

The crop yields in general, other than cotton, exceed those of any year known in our history. This is especially true of the small grains as a whole, and particularly of all the forage crops, which are in abundance beyond precedent. This latter fact is one that is most significant and of very large moment to the country as a whole.

Mean as Dirt.

D'ye know the Lord makes some almighty mean people? Some of 'em are so blamed mean that they ain't fit to live. They ain't got any heart, or any decency or any gratitude. Just pison mean yellow dogs.

There ought to be a law against the kind of meanness people like that put over.

Maybe this ain't just the kind of good thoughts that a fellow ought to start the new year with, but I can't help it. A customer of mine handed me a story last week that started all this. There ain't anything specially new in it—the same thing is going on all the time, but for some reason or other this case sort of specially stirred me up.

This customer has a store in one of the Pennsylvania factory towns where things had been on the blink for quite a while. Plants shut down and men out of work. But about six or eight months ago they got a bunch of war orders and things took on a boom. Everybody got busy and all the men went to work.

This customer of mine had a lot of the factory trade on his books. You know that's good trade when everything goes right. Those chaps make good money and they live good. They pay their bills, too, most of 'em, when they have the money.

There was one family dealing with him right along—a boss moulder or something like that. He had six children and they got away with a big pile of stuff. This fellow had been dealing with this store for two or three years and always paid up, and when the shut-down came he hadn't anything saved and it hit him hard.

For six months this store carried the moulder's family and when the moulder went back to work he owed pretty near $300. As I told my friend—this was straight charity. These people couldn't buy the food they ate, therefore if nobody let 'em have it on tick, they'd have starved to death. Straight charity, that's exactly what it was.

The moulder was plumb grateful all right while he was being helped. He used to go to the store and pretty near cry. When he got back to work there wasn't anything he wouldn't do for the man that had helped him. He even offered to work for him for nothing while he was out of work to help out.

All right. He went back to work and made more money than he ever made before, because he got extra work at overtime rate. They had so much work at where he worked that they didn't know which way to turn to get it out.

The very day that he went back to work, his wife started in to buy her goods at a chain store. And them owing $300 to the fellow that had kept 'em for six months!

Now d'ye know, I've heard of these cases before—the woods are full of 'em—but I never had one handed to me that had the same effect on me that this had. The blamed cold-blooded part of it!

"Well, what did you do about it?" I asked my friend.

"I sent him a letter asking him to pay up," he said, "but they didn't even answer it. Of course they couldn't pay up. I knew that, but I thought that they might do something. Then I wrote asking him to pay me so much a week."

"Did he answer that?"

"No."

"Why don't you sue the dog?" I said. "Show him up anyway."

"What would be the use? He hasn't got anything except his job. What's the use of spending any more money?"

"Why don't you see his boss?" I said. "Maybe he knows dirty meanness when he sees it. He might make him pay."

"I don't believe it," he said.

But I'd try that if it was me. Why if that was me, I'd dog that slink night and day until he came across. I'd send collectors to his house. I'd get a judgment against him and put hand bills around his house offering it for sale. I understand you can do that. I'd stop him in the street and dun him. I'd make him so blamed ashamed of himself—if it was in him to be ashamed—that he'd pay something every week to get rid of me. I'd go see hi preacher—skunks like that alway belong to some church, seems to m And if he belonged to a lodge I see the grand dink-dink of that. I tell 'em all about it and I'd let hi know I did, too.

If he could get away with th he'd have a brass hide.

Of course I don't know anythin about this one case, but I believe good bit of the time it's the wife fault when a man does a trick li that. That don't excuse him—n at all—it just explains it a bit. I had a wife that could do a stin ing thing like that, or even thi of doing it, by jeehosaphat, I'd ha her!

Somebody else that's to blame the grocer that lets these pikers g away with it. They know the gr cer'll soon give up. If every groc who sees somebody getting ready give him the cold hand-out wou get right up on his hind legs a stay there until he'd made the do Package Ham and Bacon Hearing Postponed.

The hearing on the question whether single hams and single sides of bacon which are wrapped or covered with paper, cloth or gelatin are "in package form," which is to be held in the Bureau of Chemistry, 216 Thirteenth streets, S. W., Washington, D. C., and which was tentatively set for February 2, 1916, at 2 P. M., has been postponed. It is now proposed to hold this hearing on Wednesday, March 8, 1916, at the same place and at the same hour.

Cold Weather Specialties

Fresh Sausage, Scrapple, Souse, Liver Pudding

Burk's Fresh Sausage

Composed entirely of selected tender pieces of pork, not the ordinary trimmings commonly used. Not cheapened in price and quality by the addition of tripe, boiled rice and sundry substitutes. Correctly seasoned, not offensive to sensitive stomachs because of pungent herbs. Nutritious. In four styles—hashed fine and coarse, linked and in straight casings.

Burk's Philadelphia Scrapple

Prepared from the very best materials—good, wholesome meats and extra fine corn meal. Well boiled and seasoned to suit the most critical. Not to be compared with some cheap products of doubtful hues and colors. Burk's eats as good as it looks. Superior to farmers' products. In pans of 15 pounds each.

Burk's Pig Souse

is a seasonable specialty prepared fresh daily, in pans of five pounds each. The jelly is clear and transparent and free from vegetable gelatines and ill-smelling glue stock. Contains plenty of meat and garnished with slices of lemon and parsley.

Proves attractive when turned out of the pan, and is a quick seller, saving the consumer the trouble of cooking pig's feet, so difficult to obtain at this season of the year.

Burk's Liver Pudding

Of the usual "Burk" standard—clean and unadulterated. Rich in quality and an excellent dish when fried, or, after removing the casing, hashed with potatoes. In rings of 1 pound each.

No. 345.—When Employees Combine to Force Another Employee's Discharge.

An employer never quite knows what is going to happen to him, in connection with his employees, and the more successful he is, and the more numerous his employees, the greater his uncertainty. The predicament revealed in the following letter, which comes to me from a large Pittsburgh, Pa., retailer, supplies an illustration:—

> We have been through an experience which may interest you and your readers, among which we have been regularly numbered for several months. In fact, we may not be through with it yet, as threats of suit are being made against us. Both my partner and myself feel as if we should like to have your opinion on our case, in order to see just how much protection ourselves and our employees have against such coercion.
> We employ about eighteen clerks, all, as we thought, honest and reliable men. About a year ago we began to miss goods from stock, and after trying various means, did not succeed in locating the thief. Considerable valuable stuff disappeared altogether. Finally one of our own clerks saw another one of the eighteen stealing, and reported to us. We taxed the offender with it and in the end he confessed and we discharged him. This man was one of the most popular men we had, while the clerk who found him out was unpopular. So unpopular was he that following his action the other clerks all served notice on us in writing that "we the undersigned, do hereby declare that we refuse to work after next Monday, December 13th, as long as ——— is employed as clerk."
> We tried to reason with the clerks but did not accomplish anything, and as we did not want a strike on our hands over the holidays we did what may have been cowardly, we let the other man go. It was not a pleasant thing to do, but we thought it all over and could not see how to avoid it. We did give the discharged man a letter saying he was discharged for no fault of his own, but at the demand of his fellow clerks because he reported the dishonesty of one of them.
> Now the clerk is threatening to sue all of us for conspiracy, and we are facing more trouble. My partner and I both feel that if we had our time to go over again we would never discharge a good employee under such circumstances, no matter what it cost us.
> I have let it be known whether or not I think the man has any case

A discharged employee in such a case as this has no action against his employer; if there was no contract the employer had a right to dispense with his services any time he wished to, and without any reason whatever.

But he certainly has a good chance to recover something against the employees who took his job from him, and I hope I may be pardoned if I express the hope that he will make the effort. If he will sue those men for conspiracy to do him an injury, he can hardly fail to get a verdict, if the facts are as set forth in the above letter.

This is an interesting case, and I have examined the law concerning it rather carefully. It has been several times held that employees "have the right to advance their own interests in any proper way, but not for the purpose merely of inflicting injury upon another." There can hardly be any question, under these facts, that these clerks entered into an unlawful conspiracy to harm a fellow-employee, and that every one of them could be made to pay heavy damages.

Some of the leading cases on the point even hold that employees may not combine to force the discharge of a fellow employee because they dislike him. In one Pennsylvania case some employees threatened to leave unless one of their number, against whom they had a grudge, was discharged. The employer discharged the man complained of, who promptly sued the other employees for damages, charging conspiracy. At the trial the employees all denied that they had moved to obtain his discharge because of the grudge; it was merely because he was distasteful to them. The court said they would be no better off even if that were true. They could lawfully combine to cause his discharge, said the court, only "if their fellow-employee's habits, or his character, or his conduct while at work towards his fellow-employees was such as to render him an unfit associate for ordinary employees of good character."

In other words, mere dislike was not enough.

There is a great difference between what one person may do and what a number, acting together, may do along this line. One clerk in the Pittsburgh case could have threatened to leave if the clerk who exposed the thieving were not discharged, and if he could have persuaded his employer to discharge the other man, the latter would have no legal complaint against anybody. This is from a leading Massachusetts case right on this point:—

> A single individual may well be left to take his chances in a struggle with another individual. But in a struggle with a number of persons combined together to fight an individual, the individual's chance is small, if it exists at all. It is plain that a strike of a combination of persons has a power of coercion which an individual does not have. The result of this is that what is lawful for an individual is not the test of what is lawful for a combination of individuals; or to state it in another way, there are things which it is lawful for an individual to do which it is not lawful for a combination to do. We have no doubt that it is within the legal right of a single person to refuse to work with another for the reason that the other person is distasteful to him, or for any other reason, however arbitrary. But what is lawful for an individual is not necessarily lawful for a combination of individuals.

The law is clear, and the fact that it is so clear offers a good way out of such a difficulty as my Pittsburgh correspondent is in. What is that way? It is to let the employees who are trying to get one of their number discharged, go on until they have hopelessly compromised themselves, and then show them that they had laid themselves open to an action for conspiracy, which would certainly be brought against them if they persisted to the end. In fact this might be a way of settling t Pittsburgh case even now. T men can be shown what is threat ing them and perhaps be led to c sent to the discharged clerk getti his job back.

Consumer Confidence an Asset

QUALITY is a far greater issue today than it was years ago. One dissatisfied customer is a menace to success. The successful grocer knows this and therefore endeavors, by fair dealing and selling quality goods, to cultivate a spirit of confidence in every one of his customers.

National Biscuit Company goods enjoy the full confidence of American housewives. You can make this confidence one of your assets by keeping N. B. C. products well to the fore. Display them in your windows, on your counters and shelves—and their influence upon your sales will be well marked.

Undoubtedly this circular will get attention, but I believe it would have gotten more if it had been what it started out to be—an advertisement of "Christmas Holiday Specials." It isn't that at all. Butter, butterine, sugar, cornmeal and probably twenty or thirty more of the articles which appear on this circular are not Christmas groceries. I should have kept them in the background around Christmas time, unless I had something special to advertise about them. It seems clear that they should not have gone on a circular with a heading "Christmas Holiday Specials."

According to my own personal view, this circular is too large. Half or three-quarters the size would have been better, for it wouldn't have presented such a bunch of stuff to read. Particularly stuff not especially connected with Christmas in any way. I can see how the matter on this circular could be cut down probably half. I should have advertised nuts, cranberries, candy, fruit, plum pudding, possibly coffee, a few canned vegetables, soups, perhaps baking powder, olives, poultry, seasoning, and mincemeat, and practically all the other stuff I would have left off. People haven't much time to think about spaghetti, and corn starch around the holiday season and unless you have something very special, it is a waste of time trying to interest them in anything much but Christmas stuff.

I have for a long time wanted to try an experiment in circular advertising. It is this: instead of issuing one large circular like this once a week, to issue one small circular every day, with one article advertised on it. The point is the daily concentration. Just a small circular, perhaps 6 x 8 inches, exploiting one thing as strongly as possible. In six days you could cover a good deal of the ground you could cover on the large circular and I have always believed that the aggregate returns would very likely be better.

Dry Goods Business Normal.

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:—

Current wholesale distribution of dry goods is normal as compared with the corresponding period of a year ago.

Road sales for immediate and spring delivery show a considerable gain over a year ago, and the number of customers visiting the market shows a slight increase.

Collections are normal.

Prices are firm.

Wording of stamp of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association

Facsimile of stamp of Philadelphia Association of Manufacturers' Representatives

"Protection"

Read elsewhere in this issue the statement of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association as to what the above stamps mean on a specialty order. The keynote is protection.

Every manufacturer who doesn't use specialty stamps on his orders is not unworthy, but you are entitled to wonder why, if he has every confidence in his product, he does not show it in the way the strongest manufacturers in the country are showing it.

Everything considered, the best thing you can do from all standpoints, is to refuse to sign any specialty order unless it bears, for your protection, one or the other of the above stamps.

With a stamp on your order, you know you're all right. Keep that in your mind.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry g ods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

THE VALUE OF BRIGHT STORES

¶ The difficulty of making a sale—whether it be dry goods or vegetables, jewelry or shoes is increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Other things being equal, the Electrically lighted shop will do more business than the store which uses other illuminants. "Indoor Daylight" can only be obtained by the use of Mazda Electric lamps.

There are other washing helps beside Chase-O, but every other has some weak point. One distributes the bluing unevenly, another gums the clothes up with paraffine, and so on.

Chase-O is an absolutely perfect product. It will cut the work of washing in half. We would be exceedingly foolish to make this statement if it wasn't true. Why Not Start a "Settle-up Day" in Your Town?

The National Credit Men's Association is Using the Successful Experience of an Iowa Town to Draw General Attention to the Plan. Read How the Money Rolled in at Waukon, Iowa.

The Minneapolis Credit Men's Association has been sending to the various trade organizations throughout the Northwest an article entitled, "Settle-up-day" and has secured for it wide publication. The purpose has been to try to encourage the merchants' organizations in various communities to try out the Waukon, Iowa, plan for a settle-up-day, the remarkable results of which are set forth in the circular given.

It would be a great boon to business and to society as a whole if the Waukon plan were made use of in every town and city of the country. There undoubtedly is a healthier tone in Waukon as a result of this experiment. The day of interminable credits in Waukon has passed, there is a finer sense of the obligation connected with a debt than there has ever been in that town before and manufacturers and wholesalers can make their sales to retailers there with better assurance than ever that their invoices are to be paid within the time stipulated.

The following is the interesting circular prepared by the Minneapolis Association:—

SETTLE-UP-DAY.

Two small cities of the Middle West have had a "settle-up-day" and merchants and customers say it's fine. The first "settle-up-day" was held at Waukon, Iowa, a short time ago. The Waukon merchants' organization entered on the plan after two weeks of thorough advertising in the newspapers and in circulars distributed from house to house and from farm to farm in the surrounding country. They then mailed statements to all their patrons, especially those in arrears, calling their attention to the approach of "settle-up-week" and detailing the plan of the merchants.

The merchants announced that they had notified all wholesalers and jobbers with whom they traded of their intention to use the money paid in to them by their patrons to meet bills of wholesalers, as well as all other bills outstanding in the Waukon community; and, in fact, about half of the money taken in by the merchants was paid out to factories and producers in and about Waukon.

The week did not open very propitiously for the plan, but when two days had passed nearly 500 bills were counted paid. It was estimated that there were about 2,500 outstanding bills By Wednesday of that week the paying-up movement was under full headway, and the campaign was so pushed that merchants were enabled to remind the backward debtor with a minimum of offense.

"Have you paid your bill to-day?" signs were posted throughout the city, and the query was picked up widespread by the citizens and applied with as much freedom as the "Have you registered to-day?" query of primary politics.

The general run of the citizens responded without difficulty to the plan, but the slow-paying debtors had to be jarred repeatedly. The merchants mailed out a bill every day to each of their customers who owed accounts of long standing. The bills were mailed out on billheads of the merchants' organization. A bureau was established where protesting citizens could thresh out their differences with any merchant over any bill, the amount, terms or existence of which they disputed. Few took advantage of this bureau, but such work as it did was effective.

The report on the decisions of this bureau shows that in almost all the cases the books of the merchant were right, unless he had been grossly careless in keeping his books, as was found in two or three cases. Forgetfulness was the cause of 90 per cent. of the unpaid old accounts.

When the balance of the week was cast up it was reported that more than 2,000 bills had been paid up to date, and that bank deposits of the merchants were $40,000 higher than ever before. The $40,000 immediately was started on its way to the various creditors of the merchants, and it is estimated that $25,000 of this found its way almost at once back into the hands of the original payers.

These People Think Granulated Sugar Will Rule Around Seven Cents This Summer.

A Careful Analysis of the Present Sugar Situation With a Forecast of 1916 Shows That American Refiners Will Have to Cut Down Our Own Consumption by Putting Up the Price.

In making a forecast of the sugar market for the year 1916, a great many unusual incidents have to be taken into consideration; in fact, the conditions that confront the trade are absolutely abnormal. To begin with, we face a big shortage in the world supply, at least 1,500,000 tons, and in addition to this the three largest beet sugar producing countries in the world, Russia, Germany and Austria, will be unable. as long as the European war lasts, to export any sugar. Even then it is improbable that they can export much, the chances being that Germany and Austria, not any.

As for France and Belgium, their beet crop for 1916 is not nearly sufficient for their own requirements, and it is estimated that France alone will have to import during the year 1916 about 400,000 tons of cane sugar.

Next consider the United Kingdom, including Canada, who has always been dependent upon other nations for her sugar supply. The estimated consumption of sugar for the coming year is figured at 2,375,000 tons. This is based on past averages and gives us an idea of what the United Kingdom will import from other countries. Of course, practically the entire Java cane crop of 1,275,000 tons is at her disposal and perhaps a few hundred thousand tons more of cane sugar can be counted on from her sugar producing colonial possessions, as well as outside countries. To figure very broadly the total amount will probably not exceed 1,500,000 tons, which leaves a deficit of 875,000 tons which can only be filled by practically two countries. The United States for refined sugar and Cuba for raws, say, an equal quantity of each.

Remember that in getting refined from the United States, England is virtually drawing on Cuba, as this is practically the only sugar available for export purpose from this country under the existing tariff laws, consequently this places Cuba in an undeniable position to control the sugar situation.

Now let us look to Cuba. It has been recently estimated by Mr. Himely, one of the Cuban statisticians, that the crop of 1916 will be 3,175,000 tons; the largest Cuba has ever produced. This can be attributed to three reasons:—

1. The natural development of the country.

2. The fact that Cuba has had three large crops which have been marketed at good averages, money therefrom being fairly easy, and this together with American financial institutions taking hold of various Cuban enterprises, has put the average Cuban planter in an almost independent position.

3. The foresight of the Cuban planters in not only realizing but anticipating the strength of their position for the year 1916 and planting every available acre. Of this crop at least 80,000 tons are needed for home consumption, which leaves 3,095,000 tons for export.

Now, how is the United States fixed to meet these conditions? Based on past increase in domestic consumption, we would use under normal conditions about 4,000,000 tons for the coming year. Our chief sources of supply outside of Cuba are the Hawaiian and Philippine Islands and Porto Rico, whose estimated total crops amount to about 1,225,000 tons, of which probably only 1,000,000 tons will be available for export, as we must take into consideration the home consumption of these countries and exports to other countries. Then, again, we have our domestic beet and Louisiana cane crops of 775,000 tons, which added to the 1,000,000 tons from our colonies and the 3,095,000 tons securable from Cuba, make a grand total of 4,870,000 tons for domestic and export use in this country. Bear in mind, however, that only duty paying sugars can be used for export purposes. Understand, we are figuring on England buying all refined sugar. Now, literally this is not so, as undoubtedly England will fill her requirements with about half Cuban raws and American granulated. However, as we pointed out above, either one will leave practically the same deficiency as far as the United States is concerned.

Now out of this grand total it will be necessary for us to take care of France and England to the extent of at least 1,250,000 tons, all of which must be Cuban sugar, and this added to the 4,000,000 tons needed for domestic use shows a shortage between supplies available 4,870,000 tons, and total amount of sugar needed for home consumption and export, 5,250,000 tons, or about 450,000 tons.

Under these conditions there is only one thing that can be done and that is to cut down the domestic consumption. In order to do this there is only one course open, and that is that the price be high to an extent that will prohibit large using of sugar. Another item not yet taken into consideration is the very high freight rate now existing between this country and Cuba. This is another very important factor which will tend to keep prices high, as under normal conditions tonnage can usually be secured for about 9 cents a hundred while the general rate to-day is about 40 cents, and we hear of some instances where 44 cents has been paid. These together with the shortage in the supply for the United States, will tend to keep the market generally strong throughout the entire coming year. We look for prices to be well maintained and while we would not attempt to anticipate prices, it would not be surprising if during the summer months of the coming year our refined market may somewhere around 7 cents. Of course this is only our private opinion. It is going to be a market where one man's guess is about as good as anothers.

overnment Says Parcels Post Food Prices Are Too High to Get Much Business.

ues Another Bulletin on Parcels Post Sale of Food Products. Says Producers Aren't Selling Low Enough and Don't Realize Impor-ance of Fresh Appearance.

cial Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
January 13, 1916.

The Department of Agriculture s issued another bulletin on "Sug-stions for Parcel Post Market-g." This bulletin, in addition to plaining the postal rates and asurement limits for parcel post tter, discusses in some detail the es of containers which are most cessful and the methods of grad-g and packing produce, so that it ll reach the consumer in good ndition, and be attractive in qual- and appearance. In treating ndards for parcel post shipments bulletin tells how to select, han- and pack poultry, and how to de and pack the various fruits l vegetables which the average mer is likely to market through post office. The bulletin points t that one of the common ob-cles to establishing parcel post mmunication between farmer and sumer is that the farmer may be willing to offer goods at a price ich attracts the customer, or that consumer may offer a price ver than the farmer can obtain a local market. To quote the letin:—

Not only must the farmer have omething additional to the usual rice to compensate him for the ex-a work, container and postage re-uired, but the consumer must also ave something to attract him to arketing by parcel post. In deter-ining what the price shall be, both e farm price and the retail price aid by the consumer when he mar-ets in the ordinary way should be ken into consideration. The con-mer must receive either a better rticle at the usual retail price or n article of the grade usually urchased at some concession in rice.

It is probable that the point which ill make the strongest appeal to e average consumer is that he can ecure by parcel post a fresher, righter, more attractive, and thus ossibly a better product than he an obtain otherwise.

The average producer, as a rule, oes not realize the importance of ppearance as a factor in selling oods and frequently is careless and ndifferent in preparing produce for arket. The consumer, on the other and, relies very largely upon ap-earance in selecting food supplies, nd unattractive articles are passed y promptly.

A personal acquaintance should e established between producer and consumer when they come into business contact. This will help a great deal in furthering parcel post marketing and also will eliminate many of the misunderstandings which may occur from time to time. A definite understanding should exist as to the duties of each in regard to remittances, claims for damaged or spoiled produce and the preservation and return of containers.

Our Canned Goods Bring Enormous Prices in South American Countries. Read These Examples.

The National Canners' Association has petitioned the Federal Trade Commission to allow a number of the American packers to combine to push foreign trade in American canned goods. If the Commission allows this to be done, the first plan is to get some of the South American countries to reduce their canned goods tariffs. The following is an extract from the petition:—

Efforts have been made to introduce canned foods into Latin-American and other countries, but there is no material development, owing to the high cost to the consumer. This arises largely from the high import duties and custom house charges. The work of the National Canners' Association in developing export trade has been particularly directed of late towards Central and South American countries, and in Argentine these charges on canned foods amount to more than the f. o. b. cost, insurance and freight to Buenos Aires. Salmon, which is sold in this country to the consumer at 15 cents a tin, retails at 60 cents and higher in Buenos Aires. On canned fruits the conditions are more difficult. The landing and custom house charges amount to nearly three times the c. i. f. price of the goods.

While the duty on canned vegetables is lower than on canned fruits, the cost to the importer in the Argentine is more than double the cost f. o. b. New York. The duty alone is 12 cents per kilo, or approximately $1.44 per dozen tins of the standard size of canned tomatoes—goods which wholesale in the United States at 85 cents to 90 cents per dozen, retailing at 10 cents a tin, and frequently for less. The same quality and size retails in Buenos Aires at 40 cents gold; in Peru, at about the same figure; in Bolivia, at from 60 cents to 70 cents a tin. Canned milk, which retails in this country at 10 cents, must be sold at 30 cents a tin in Brazil, Equador, Uruguay and most of the other Latin-American countries, although on the particular item of canned milk the conditions are more favorable in Peru.

The conditions in Brazil are even more discouraging, owing to higher duties and custom house charges. Canned tomatoes of the standard 2½ size retail for approximately $1, U. S. gold—cans which retail here for 10 cents. Canned asparagus retails at $1.33, retailing here for 20 to 25 cents. The conditions are not so extreme in Peru, nor in Chili, but the tariffs are so high as to discourage importation.

By reducing the tariffs the government concerned would derive a large increase of revenue. The total imports of canned foods from all countries into Argentine, Brazil, Chili and Peru are very small in proportion to the population.

Why a Manufacturer Should Be Permitted to Fix the Retail Price of His Product

Views of Various Believers in This Doctrine Who Offer Them as Arguments for the Pending Stevens Bill.

[The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has obtained and will from time to time present a series of statements by various well-known persons who believe that the manufacturer should have the right to tell the retailer what price he must get for the manufacturer's product. All of the views which will be presented can be taken as arguments for the pending Stevens Bill, which seeks to give a manufacturer that right.—Ed.]

No. 11.—By John Shepard, Jr., Boston, Mass.

Certainly every merchant who is not in the business of price-cutting would be glad to know that on a trademarked or special brand article (and only such would come under this law) a reasonable profit was assured, and that much staple merchandise now sold at practically cost would be disposed of at a legitimate profit.

There could be no detriment to a first-class merchant if prevented from cutting the price of such merchandise as is above referred to, and trademarked merchandise, remember, is generally that for which the manufacturer has created, or will create, a demand. In such cases you buy from a manufacturer goods for which the advertising has been, or is being done, and for which a demand has been created, and you would make your legitimate per cent. of profit.

You would not "be in the grasp of the manufacturer and liable to all his whims," for his whole success depends on having the retailer satisfied with the intended profit, and the consumer satisfied with his product.

In other words, to my mind, the manufacturer's strong point will be his arranging his prices so that the retailer will be satisfied, and no manufacturer who expects to succeed will be foolish enough to arrange prices in any other way.

No retailer is obliged to buy any particular merchandise and will not do so unless a demand is being created, and this demand he will be glad to supply at the satisfactory profit which the manufacturer will place upon his merchandise.

Please remember that it is only trademarked or special brand goods on which a certain selling price can be required, and that talk about the impossibility of marking down merchandise and having sales, etc., has no apparent bearing whatever on this bill.

Trademarked goods will not embrace and could not naturally embrace hundreds upon hundreds of articles that are in the market constantly and from which come the larger part of our business.

One writer makes the point that you have to be a bankrupt or go out of business in order to change the price on trademarked merchandise. It is in every manufacturer's interest to see that his goods are sold, or else he will have no demand for them, and if the goods happen to be such (and they seldom will be) that weather conditions affect the sale, such manufacturer would naturally arrange that on a certain date certain prices might be made to dispose of such stock as is on hand.

If the goods become shopworn or soiled in any way, then the Stevens bill provides satisfactorily for the sale of the merchandise.

As for the elimination of competition, we will find plenty of competition outside of any trademarked merchandise. Not only competition in prices, but competition in service

Personally, I cannot see one point that has been made wherein a first class merchant is going to suffer I see only benefit to him, but I do see a natural opposition on the part of houses which exist by price-cutting, this being one of the means of deceiving the public into the belief that other merchandise which they sell is also marked lower than the market price, whereas the average must be proportionately the same as anyone else in order to keep alive.

Has This Coffee Scheme Been Offered to You?

An Alleged Offer by "the Largest Coffee Company in the World" to Sell Retailers in Two Bag Lots at First Cost. Scheme Doesn't Seem Very Good, Especially After Reading Report of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World's" New York Correspondent.

It is a dull week when some scheme to get grocers does not come out. The one which is announced this week is in many respects unique. It is the scheme of the "North American Coffee Importing Co., Inc., owners and controllers of Arabanca, Juba and Private Growth, 71 Wall street, New York." The concern does not appear in Bradstreet's. Its scheme is described in the following letter:—

365 Fifth Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.,
Jan. 5, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Inclosed please find shipping blank, order slip and contract and letter of the North American Coffee Importing Co. I would like to have the above papers returned after you have examined same.

I would like to ask you about this company—about their liability and general standing. It looks to me very suspicious.

Their scheme of doing business is as follows:—

A salesman (not very up to date) came in, introduced himself as representative of the above company, being the "largest coffee company in the world." On account of the war they had too much coffee in the storage house. They always have done business with the jobbing trade only, and principally exporting shiploads of coffee to the other side, especially to Germany, and being that that country is blockaded by England, therefore they are forced to dispose of this great amount of stock in this market. Therefore they come and sell their coffee to the retail grocery stores at the same price by buying 10-pound bags as to the jobbers buying 500-pound bags, but we have to give $2 margin on every bag, and we can draw the goods as we want them within one year. We get 10 days, less 2 per cent., or 30 days net, after we get the goods. Then the salesman fills out order blank (No. 1), after he has the margin in his pocket; then he gives me the paper (No. 2) with the red seal, but this I never read. There is a clause in paper No. 3 to pay the full amount in advance.

Now comes my question to you. Do you think that this company is really as they state, the largest company in the world? I fear that they'll keep the money and not send any coffee at all; or they'll send it, but such trash that it would pay better to drop the $4 margin. Kindly answer in your paper.

Yours truly,
S. H. Wohlberg.

We agree with this correspondent that the scheme looks suspicious. The North American Coffee Importing Co. is not the largest coffee company in the world, in fact as already stated, it is not listed in Bradstreet's at all. The "sale contract," which is an ornate document printed in green and red with a red seal, provides for the sale of ten bags, afterward reduced to two. In the agreement the North American Coffee Importing Co. agrees to deliver two bags of coffee to the buyer, "upon the return of this contract, properly endorsed and subject to the following conditions: The buyer agrees to pay the full purchase price as per order slip of said coffee or of the notes given therefor and storage charges at the rate of 5 cents per bag per month from the date of final payment. The proportionate amount must always be paid on withdrawal of any part of this coffee."

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" asked its New York correspondent to investigate the scheme and this is his report:

So far as I can learn this concern doesn't control any green coffee even in New York, let alone anywhere else. Their scheme is to get a deposit from the dealer ostensibly as a margin. Deposits, by the way, are never returned. They do not explain to the dealer that buying his coffee green and having it roasted he only receives 84 pounds of the roasted coffee to the hundred, so that many of the dealers believe that they are getting coffee at a very low import price and putting up a margin as to the big buyers.

Reputable coffee houses they have tried to connect with to do roasting told them that they would be very glad of the account, provided they found it all right, but they should expect them to submit one of their contracts before they entered into any agreement, even to roast coffee for them. If they found the contract that they made with the grocer was, in their opinion, a correct one, they would be perfectly willing to do business with them. It is almost needless to say that they never came back.

Want Bankruptcy Law Repealed

An Association Called the "Anti-Bankruptcy Law Association" is Organized for the Purpose. President of National Wholesale Grocers' Association Says It Has Served Its Usefulness and is Now a Mere Refuge for Crooks. Creditors Get But Little, as Most of the Money is Eaten Up With Costs and Fees.

Are you aware that for the fiscal ear ending June 30, 1914, there ere cleared through the bank- ıptcy court liabilities aggregating 244,721,826.29 and that for the fis- ıl year ending June 30, 1915, these abilities totaled $245,055,004.22?)f this staggering sum, which rep- esents nearly half a billion dollars, ıere was returned to unsecured reditors during the two years a ttle over 7 per cent., from which as also exacted a further toll in ıe way of fees for sundry and ivers collection attorneys.

Is this enormous and needless overhead" to be absorbed year fter year, without protest or an at- empt to eliminate it, made?

Is business of our country to rovide an annuity for an army of twyers, trustees, receivers, refer- es, custodians, auctioneers and arasitic attaches of the bankruptcy ourts, by a tax which exceeds the alue of the world's production of offee each year?

Are you satisfied that the pay- ıent of some $35 costs should ab- olve one from all liabilities? With salted' assets the fraud may well fford to laugh. Is it right that by ıe payment of this small assess- ıent, immunity from honest obli- ations may be purchased, thus galizing thievery?

Should the Government license ıe plundering of the resources of usiness, which may be done volun- ırily once every seven years and as ften as three creditors wish usually brothers, relatives and riends)?

Is it right to extend a general in- itation to the people of the United tates to incur debts that may be aid by the mere formality of a dis- harge in bankruptcy, thus lower- ıg the moral standard of our na- ion and inculcating a callousness nd indifference in the hearts of our ellowmen towards the payment of onest obligations?

Should this alluring procedure be ontinued, to the detriment of the onest and upright?

We believe that it is to the best interests of business in general to repeal the bankruptcy law:—

Because on a referendum vote taken by the members of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, not one member voted in favor of the present law. Everyone voted for either the repeal or amendment of the law.

Because fraud is easily perpetrated under the Bankruptcy Law and the burden of proving such fraud is on the creditor. Although circumstances point to fraud, the presumption of innocence which the act gives the bankrupt protects the fraud.

Because the cost of administering insolvent debtors through the Bankrutpcy Court leaves little to be divided among the creditors.

Because the law has served its purpose—that of giving those who were unfortunate during the panic, just preceding the law, a chance to clean up and start anew in the business world.

The sentiment against the Bankrutpcy Law is unquestionably growing, but without directed and concerted effort there will be little accomplished. A well-organized association is vitally necessary.

There were many bills introduced at our last Congress advocating the repeal of the Bankruptcy Law and these without the stimulus of any trade organization or concerted effort on the part of business.

With the backing of a strong organization these bills will receive the consideration they merit and our concerted effort will be very instrumental in securing the attention our project deserves.

Now, Mr. Businessman, help us in our task of eliminating this source of needless waste and this enormous tax imposed yearly. It is clearly to your interests and your support and co-operation will further strengthen the cause.

Remember, our fight is your fight and your membership in our organization is solicited.

OSCAR B. MCGLASSON,
President Anti-Bankruptcy Law Association, 225 N. State St., Chicago, Ill.

"KUP KWALITY FIRST KONSIDERATION"

Hasn't This Sometimes Happened to You?

¶ Our advertising of Harisco Standardized Coffee has given us customers all over the United States. We have found a tremendous response to our argument that the trouble with the average grocer's coffee department has been that his coffees conformed to no standard, and often when he had a customer going nicely along on one line of coffee, the very next shipment would throw him off.

¶ Harisco Standarized Coffees are coffees of the very highest grade, considering their type, and by our own method are kept uniform and consistent. Once get acquainted with this line and you will never go back to the old hit-or-miss way of buying coffee.

WITH THE EDITOR

A compelling argument for the quick turnover with small profit is made by the 1915 report for Swift & Co., which was made public during the week. The concern's gross business was over $500,000,000 and the net profits were 2 8-10 per cent. on sales, or $14,087,500. In spite of the small percentage of profit when compared with sales, it represented 18.7 per cent. on the capital of $75,000,000. Last year's earnings were greater than for many years.

The Quick, Large Turnover.

Swift & Co. could have netted only one per cent. on their sales, and still made 6 per cent. on their investment. The larger business a man does, the smaller profit he needs to make. That is the chief argument of the merchant who cuts prices, and there is certainly something in it, if it means selling goods on a low level, and not slaughtering them. Merchants say they can sell twice as many of a thing at 10 cents as they can at 13 or 14, and if they can, they have done themselves good in several ways. They have probably brought more customers to their store, they have turned over some more capital, they have taken in some new money, and they have increased their buying power. And they have lost nothing at all.

A new plan of increasing the consumption of canned goods comes out of the West. A well known broker and an experienced advertising man have organized a bureau for the above purpose. From the brief description in another column it appears that the basic part of the plan is demonstration to consumers. Another part will be the dissemination of information about canned goods and why they should be used.

The Key to Selling More Canned Goods.

Demonstration is all right, dissemination of information is all right, advertising is all right, but if the consumption of canned goods is ever to be materially increased, the greater part of the work must be done by retail grocers. They should and doubtless would be willing to do it, since canned goods of all kinds pay a fair profit. The retailer is the only person who comes directly in contact with the consumer of canned goods while she is in the act of buying. He can make or mar any plan to increase consumption, and even where he is interested and prepared to do what he could, he could be made much more effective if plans are given to him showing how he can work scientifically and systematically.

The canned goods packers have never quite appreciated the potency of the retailer, in their plans to sell more canned goods, and until they do they will never have any marked success.

In this week's argument for the Stevens bill, which would give the manufacturer power to fix the retail price of his trademarked product, Mr. Shepard, the author, says something which experience shows not to be the fact. It is this:—

A Misstatement.

> You (the retailer) will not be in the grasp of the manufacturer and liable to all his whims, for his whole success depends on having the retailer satisfied with the intended profit and the consumer satisfied with his product.

I grant that the manufacturer's success depends on having the consumer satsified with his product, but I deny that in his mind it depends on having the retailer satisfied with his profit. Plenty of manufacturers care nothing whether the retailer is satisfied with his profit or not. In fact they never think about that. The manufacturer of Cream of Wheat is a case in point. Hardly a retail grocer in the United States is making any profit on Cream of Wheat, and if he knows that, it follows that he is dissatisfied. Yet look how Cream of Wheat sells. Its success is not dependent upon what Mr. Shepard says it is at all. It is dependent first on making consumers want the product, and second on the weakness of grocers in being willing to sell it at their own expense.

With some considerable knowledge of the National Bankruptcy Act, its workings and its accomplishments, I should be glad to see it repealed. A plan to repeal it is described in another column. The Bankruptcy Act was passed in a time of great stress to relieve unfortunate business men of the burden of debt which they were utterly unable to pay, after they had turned everything they had over to their creditors. Obviously a man could not give more than his all, and the theory of the law was that a debtor who had done that should be set free from further responsibility.

Repeal the Bankruptcy Act.

A sound theory and a good thing to do—when the debtor deserves it. But my own judgment is that out of twenty-five bankruptcy cases there is not more than one which is honest from beginning to end, and there might prove to be not more than one out of fifty. A large percentage are the cases of crooked little foreigners who no more deserve the protection of the Bankruptcy Act than a pig deserves a bed in the White House. They lie, they commit perjury, they conceal assets—they cheat and lie and steal, all in ways made possible by the Bankruptcy Act. From the day it was repealed fraud in the winding up of business enterprises would decrease probably 50 per cent.

The honest, well-meaning debtor needs no more protection to-day than the creditors of such a man are always willing to give him anyway. And a crooked debtor deserves no protection.

It seems remarkable that with the enormous sums of money that we spend to run the Government, that our money seems to buy so little of the real initiative and enterprise that marks private business. I have from the Department of Commerce a printed bulletin, "Census Bureau's Summary Concerning the Refined Sugar Industry for 1914." All of the figures for 1914 are given—number of establishments, raw sugar used, and so on, but the statement is made that "the figures are preliminary and subject to such change and correction as may be necessary from a further examination of the original reports."

Inefficient.

Is there any reason why the preliminary report of an industry so important as sugar should be one year late? Such tardiness could not exist in the average private business.

Worth Reading and Remembering

1. Make good resolutions intelligently and record them.

2. Accumulate all circumstances which will reinforce your resolutions.

3. Keep away from temptation.

4. Keep away from associates who discourage you.

5. Put yourself in conditions that encourage the new way.

6. Seize the first opportunity to act on resolutions you make.

7. Make engagements incompatible with the old way.

8. Never suffer an exception to occur until the new habit is securely rooted in your life.

9. Remember, until the new habit is fixed, each lapse makes it more difficult.

10. It is the keeping, and not the making, of good resolutions which affects the brain.

If you have decided to feature nationally advertised goods, and thus get the benefit of the advertising manufacturers are doing for them, and want a particularly striking talking point, use this: That every manufacturer who does national advertising for a product bets his whole reputation and all the money he has invested in advertising that that product is all right and superior.

You and your customer can rest assured the manufacturer is making that bet safe.

This Tells the Tale

¶ A product which has been on the market fifty-eight years is a product which has stood the hardest of all tests—the test of time. "Knight's Cooking Extracts" is a phrase familiar to man, woman and child, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Lakes to the Gulf. It is easy to tell why; no housewife ever had a bottle go back on her and no housewife ever will. Good extracts must be on your shelves. Grocers, if you sell Knight's Extracts we need say nothing more to you; if you don't, we want one order from you—we are sure of more. You are certain of their absolute purity and a good profit.

Pennsylvania News Items.

A case tried against Armour & Co. at Altoona during the week would seem to demonstrate that the Dairy and Food Department has as it claims, an infallible method of telling even the best storage eggs from fresh. William K. Baird and I. Ross Kline, representatives of Armour & Co. at Altoona, were convicted of selling storage eggs as fresh. The evidence consisted largely of a description of the new method of examination.

This General Storekeeper Will Try to Get Some New Food Laws Next Session.

Believes Some Additions to Pennsylvania's Present Food Law System Are Necessary and Will Try to Induce Legislature to Pass Them.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Gettysburg, Pa.,
January 12, 1916.

I will at the next assembly of the Legislature at Harrisburg endeavor to have a law passed that no dried fruit prepared with sulphur dioxide, or any other preparation, shall be sold or offered for sale in this State under penalty and imprisonment. Also a law that no rice shall be sold coated with glucose and talcum under a penalty and imprisonment. Such doctored goods should not be allowed to come into the State. They cause thousands of merchants the trouble of stamping the toots, stating how the contents are treated; then comes the trouble for millions of house wives of cleaning all such doctored groceries or fruit.

We order weekly goods from Baltimore and many articles are not sent. The wholesalers say these goods do not conform to Pennsylvania pure food laws. We are now of the opinion that dried fruit and doctored rice should not be sold in Pennsylvania. What say the Pennsylvania merchants?

S. S. W. Hammers.

The Home of Heckin's.

"There is no such word as 'can't'—at least in our business," said A. E. Heckin, secretary and treasurer of the Heckin Can Co., Cincinnati, in a recent interview. "During 1915 there were skeptics among us, a few men who thought the country was going to the demnition bow-wows, but we scotched the demon of dread and soon warmed up the pedal extremities of those who were suffering from 'cold feet.' The result was the biggest year our company ever had."

It is this same feeling of confidence under any and all conditions; of determination to meet the situation bravely and resolutely, no matter how discouraging it appears, that has made the Heckin Can Co. one of the leaders of the world in its field—producing plain and lithographed cans and pails.

The home of the Heckin Can Co. is at Sixth, New and Culvert streets, Cincinnati, and its plant is said to be the largest of its kind in the United States under one roof. The building is fireproof and strictly modern, with streaming daylight and plenty of sunshine pouring in through the many windows. There is a wealth of automatic machinery, which, together with the most modern systems, tends to reduce cost. A complete art and engraving plant is maintained, equipped to produce or reproduce. The company makes its own dies and tools and also grinds most of its own colors.

The equipment for the butchers' supply business is patented, lard pails being actually lithographed, instead of stenciled, as is usually done. Small orders for any line of work can be handled in two or three days and the best service is rendered at all times.

The company was organized as a corporation on August 4, 1901, the officers being James J. Heckin, president; Charles Lewis, vice-president, and A. E. Heckin secretary and treasurer. Henry L. Gates is sales manager and Col. C. E. Hake, Jr., general manager.—Advt.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week. Business is healthy and a good active demand is reported. Prices are about unchanged from a week ago. Here and there lots on which slight concessions were made have disappeared, with perhaps other concessions being offered on other lots, but without any appreciable change anywhere.

Coffee.

The coffee market, speaking particularly of Rio and Santos, has had a sharp advance during the week in options. On account of continued shipping difficulties in Brazil the option market advanced about 50 points. Actual coffee on spot in this country has not advanced accordingly, but Rio 7s are up perhaps a quarter cent and Santos 4s about the same. The market is dull at the advance. Milds have not advanced correspondingly, but are steady and about unchanged. Java and Mocha quiet at ruling figures.

Sugar.

The sugar market is gradually tending downward. Refiners are now asking 5.75 for granulated, while beet granulated has declined about the same amount and is now quoted at 5.55 cents. Raws show no particular change for the week, and Cuban raws are quoted around 4.30 to 4.51 cents. As the full tide of Cuban raw sugar sets in lower prices for refined may be expected. The demand is quiet.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose remains unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is in fair demand at unchanged prices. Sugar syrup still firm and ruling on a comparatively high basis. The demand confined almost entirely to manufacturing. Molasses unchanged and firm.

Fish.

The market shows no change during the week in any line of prepared fish. Mackerel are firm on account of scarcity and in moderate demand. Cod, hake and haddock are about as they have been. The demand seasonable after change in price. Salmon is unchanged; light demand. Domestic sardines are maintained at the recently reported advance. Demand dull. Imported sardines all scarce and very high.

Canned Goods.

The minimum quotation on Maryland 3 tomatoes f. o. b. factory in a large way is $1.05 per dozen. No. 2s are ruling from 80 to 85 cents, which is 20 cents above the price asked for 3s only a few weeks ago. The demand for tomatoes is fair, considering the price. Corn and peas both unchanged for the week and in fair seasonable movement. Apples unchanged and quiet. California canned goods show no special movement from first hands and no change in price. Small Eastern staple canned goods are unchanged on last week's basis. Demand seasonable.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes show a somewhat firmer tone, as many of the cheap prunes which have been offered in the East have been cleaned up. The demand is fair. Peaches and apricots are both unchanged on last week's basis. Demand quiet. Raisins, currants and other dried fruits all show no change in any direction. Demand for all seasonably fair. Fard dates are pretty nearly cleaned up and no more are expected for several weeks.

Butter.

There is an active demand for all grades of butter, and the market is firm at ruling prices. The consumptive demand is very good and seems likely to continue that way. No large change is in sight.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm and prices are up about a quarter cent. There is a good consumptive demand which seems likely to continue, and if there is any change, it will likely be higher.

Eggs.

The egg market has shown considerable fluctuations during the week, due to weather vagaries. There was first a decline of 5 cents per dozen, then a reaction of 2 cents, and the net decline is 3 cents from last week. The future depends, as it always does at this season of the year, on the weather. The consumptive demand is good and unless one could predict the weather for the next few weeks, it would be impossible to predict developments of the egg market.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are very high, the quotation in a large way ranging from $4.05 to $4.10 per bushel. Scarcity is the reason assigned. On the other hand marrows are relatively easier and are still ruling around $4.75, which is a recession of 25 cents from the highest point. California limas are also unchanged for some time, and are in moderate demand. Green and Scotch peas are a little firmer in primary markets, but show no change in secondary markets.

Provisions.

Smoked meats are active and all goods are reported in very good demand. On account of the large export demand some goods have advanced from ½ to 2 cents per pound. Skinbacks, for instance, are about 2 cents per pound higher on this account, and regular hams are up a half cent. Pure lard is firm at an advance of a quarter cent, and so is compound. A normal consumptive demand is reported for both. Dried beef, canned meats and barreled pork are all steady and unchanged.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

Holiday dullness still prevails in the local evaporated apple market, but prices are fairly well sustained. Prime quality in 50-pound boxes is quotable at 5¾ to 6 cents, choice 6¾ to 7 cents and fancy 8½ to 9 cents. These are for carload lots. Shippers would want some premium for small quantities.

Shippers do not look for much change in values during the next few months. Prices are now below cost of production, and it is expected that the present holders will put their goods into cold storage rather than take anything less than the present values.

Any decided improvement will probably cause some advance. The export trade, however, which takes the bulk of our goods, is very disappointing. An improvement is hoped for, but shipping conditions are so difficult that it is doubtful whether we get this improvement or not.

C. C. Hall.

Rochester, N. Y.

Rice.

There is more activity in rice circles, and the opening of the year has confirmed the expectations of holders who looked for a revival of business. Prices are well maintained on all grades. Honduras and Japans are exhibiting a hardening tendency and Blue Rose is steadily stiffening, due undoubtedly to the renewed foreign inquiry, as Rangoons have advanced the parity of the lower grades of th style. Advices from the South alo the Atlantic coast report a little ir provement, but a decided movement not expected until the latter half of t month. What little Carolina is left w no doubt be in demand as soon as t trade realize the scarcity of attracti Honduras styles.

At New Orleans the strong statistic position of Honduras becomes more a parent from day to day, evinced by t fact that offerings of rough of th variety are almost nil. Honduras grad are slowly but surely advancing. Japa and broken rices are in very light su ply and bringing full prices. Blue Ros on account of large export inquiry, holding its own remarkably well.

In the Interior, Southwest Louisian Texas and Arkansas, the mills repo renewed interest and are holding pric very firm. Very little rough transa tions are reported and evidently t farmers are holding for full associati minimums.

New York and New Orleans.

Spices.

The market continues unusually a tive—the consuming demand is lar and we have had many advances both spot and future prices.

We again call your attention to t scarcity of ocean tonnage. This appli to all parts of the world. Exchan has also advanced, affecting prices many grades of goods.

Pepper.—All grades now higher, e pecially in foreign markets. The "Ra ja" cargo is in. The Government h held up part of the pepper, claiming was below Government standard. W do not know what the outcome will b but it has caused further uncertain and has had a tendency to raise price

Red Peppers.—Very firm and scar and in very active demand.

Cloves.—Futures are active and t tendency upward. Spot goods u changed.

Pimento (Allspice).—In fair dema at steady but unchanged prices.

Mace.—In better demand at stead prices. There is a great scarcity good grades.

Nutmegs.—Exceedingly scarce a tending upward. We believe very hig prices will rule over the next 60 to 9 days.

Gingers.—Are very scarce and in a tive demand. The trend is upward f all grades.

Tapiocas.—Very steady and in goo trade demand, with higher prices pro able, due to higher ocean freights.

Paprika.—There have been some ne arrivals recently of very fair qualit Prices are firmly held at previous qu tations.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—Very active many grades. Indications point sharply higher prices. Caraway a poppy distinctly firmer. Thyme and s very scarce and likely to go high Tumeric is an article that is practical out of stock.

Standard Canned Goods.

Notwithstanding a smaller dema for tomatoes, the market is stronger along the line with indications of high prices coming during the winter mont and next spring. The tomato mark does not always pan out the way it expected, as a matter of fact it usua goes the other way. The absence speculative buying this season remov what is always considered to be menace to an advancing market, and decline in values, because of such hol ings may be eliminated from consider tion when diagnosing the outlook for fall in prices later on. It does not f w, however, that a break in the mar- t is not impossible, for experience oves that usually the unexpected hap- ns more frequently than otherwise to at clusive article. From all that is own concerning the present situation, d it is believed that all the facts in e case are now known to the trade nerally, there is a solid foundation to e market values, and a decline in ices between now and the next can- ng season is hardly to be looked for The continued favorable weather for pping canned goods without danger freezing on the road has favored tomato market greatly. The job- s, as a rule, have not been anticipat- their wants for a longer period n 60 or 90 days, and this goes a long y towards keeping up a continuous nand for prompt shipment. Under h conditions it does not take long wear away the stocks in the hands of weaker holders, and the element of ertainty as to their actions is there- largely reduced. Though the sales week were small, comparatively, re was enough business done in to- oes to justify the expectation of a ewal of the liberal buying that pre- led last month. We recommend the chase of tomatoes for prompt ship- it before the weather conditions be- ie unfavorable.

Only three articles amongst the other s of canned vegetables showed any this week. Corn, sweet potatoes spinach are in demand, and the es show strong signs of improve- it. Baked beans are strong, though tive, and the same is true of the -class stringless beans.

canned fruits there was no busi- done this week excepting in small to help fill out broken stocks. All hese items will have their innings on.

ove oysters were not active this c. The outlook for the winter busi- is considered to be excellent, and prices are strong.

Government Will Not Henceforth Prosecute Business Men Who Act in Good Faith.

During the week the officials of the United States Chamber of Commerce have had an interview with the Attor- ney-General, in which he said something which seemed to cheer big business a good deal. The following was the sig- nificant part:—

> Persons entering into transactions in good faith, having cause to be- lieve them lawful, will not be crim- inally prosecuted, but if their busi- ness be found violative of the law, they will be given opportunity to re- adjust in conformity with the law without legal proceedings, unless consent decree in a civil suit is de- sired.

Patent Medicine Manufacturers Can Now be Prosecuted for Putting False Curative Claims on Their Labels.

Last Monday the United States Su- preme Court upheld the constitutionality of the Sherley amendment to the Pure Food and Drugs Act, which makes it a crime to ship in interstate commerce any package of medicine about which false claims are made regarding its curative or therapeutic value. The Sherley amendment, the constitutionality of which this opinion upheld, was passed in August, 1912, after the De- partment of Justice had lost the case against the manufacturers of "Doctor Johnson's cancer cure." In that case, Justice Day construed the Food and Drugs Act as it then read as being ap- plicable only to misstatements as to the ingredients in a cure or medicine. Mis- statements as to the curative or thera- peutic qualities of the mixture were not held to be false or fraudulent under the act before the Sherley amendment was passed. The medicine that lost the case is Eckman's Alterative.

New Plan to Boost Sale of Canned Goods.

The Crary Service Bureau, Inc., of Waukesha, Wis., has been incorporated under the laws of Wisconsin by Ralph W. Crary, the canned foods broker, and Charles T. Henderson, a well-known advertising man of Chicago, formerly publisher of the Chicago "American."

The objects of the Bureau are stated as follows:—

1. To promote the larger sale and use of canned foods, and to main- tain and establish a bureau for the dissemination of information rela- tive to the canning industry, and the economy connected with the use of its products.

2. To establish, equip and main- tain experimental kitchens for the purpose of demonstrating the use of canned foods.

3. To establish, maintain and equip display rooms for the purpose of interesting dealers and consum- ers in the greater use of canned foods, and to generally have such power over the management and ac- complishment of the above enum- erated purposes as is necessary and incidental thereto, and for the com- plete and comprehensive promotion of the same.

The plans of the Bureau have been considered and approved by a number of leading canners. Mr. Crary states that he is confident that the consump- tion of canned foods can be doubled within the next two years.

Macy & Co. Say Stevens Bill Would Hurt Small Retailer. Retail Dry Goods Men Will Launch Co-operative Enterprise. Various Items and Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, N. Y.,
January 14, 1910.

R. H. Macy & Co., in their opposition to the pending Stevens bill, which would give the manufacturer the right to fix the price of trade-marked products, are out with a novel argument this week. They say that the average cost of doing business in department stores is between 25 and 30 per cent., while the smaller stores can sell the same goods on less than 20 per cent. Macy & Co. say that the bill, by reason of the fact that it would compel department stores to sell trade-marked goods at the same price, would be a decided detriment to the small dealer because it would prevent him from using the fact that his expenses are much less than those of the department store.

In other words, according to Macey & Co.'s argument the small store can sell a product 5 per cent. cheaper than the department store and make the same profit. Selling at 5 per cent. below the department store gives it the call on a good many articles, whereas if it is compelled to sell at the same price as the department store sells, it will have no call.

The independent retailers of the Metropolitan District will have another mass meeting and demonstration in favor of the Stevens bill next Wednesday, January 19th. Several Congressmen will be present and speak. The meeting is arranged by the American Fair Trade League, which is composed of manufacturers who are exploiting the Stevens bill.

Advices received during the week from the Spanish olive districts state that the weather conditions during the growing season have been very unsatisfactory and as a result Manzanilla olives will be scarcer than usual and higher. Already they have advanced in bulk about 10 per cent. and in bottles have advanced a somewhat smaller percentage. Manzanilla olives are used more largely for stuffing than anything else.

The National Retail Dry Goods Association, which meets in this city in February, will organize, it is said, one of the most elaborate co-operative selling enterprises in the United States. A plan will be proposed to form a subsidiary corporation which will manufacture certain branded articles for the 500 stores holding membership in the association. It has not yet been decided what these articles will be, but they will be staples, and the promoters of the plan say their intention is to incorporate better value in their own brands than any other manufacturer can offer at the same price. It is said that the plan is being formed in order to circumvent the Stevens bill, under which manufacturers of branded articles would have the right to fix the retail price.

Summarized Market Conditions.

Tea fairly active, without change for the week. India and Ceylons still firm.—Brazil coffees advanced early in the week on account of shipping difficulties in Brazil, but grew dull and heavier as the week closed. Domino Sugar Products

MR. GROCER—To be sure of large, steady profits, you must sell staples—products all of us are using all the time.

Statistics prove that each of the hundred millions of people in the United States consumes an average of about eighty pounds of sugar each year. This average consumption, multiplied by the number of your customers, represents a large proportion of your gross sales.

Your problem, then, is to secure a moderate profit on each sale, which when multiplied by thousands of sales will make your final profit overtop the slow large-profit sellers.

DOMINO SUGAR PRODUCTS will help you solve your problem.

Some Wise Remarks About Business Men Going Into Politics.

I read a piece in some paper last week that talked a great string about how every business man ought to go in politics, and run for things, and be right in the thick of it all the time. It said it would bring him out and advertise him and besides that he'd be doing his duty as a citizen.

I ain't so plumb sure about that. I used to think so, too, and I've told lots of my customers that they ought to go into politics—that it would be the making of 'em, and all that, but nowadays I don't know.

I believe I'd go into politics if I was in business for myself. I'll bet I'd be good at it. I've got the figger for politics and I've got the gall. I ought to be great. But what's good for me might be mighty punk for somebody else, for if I had a store I'd expect my wife to do all the work anyway, so my being away wouldn't make any difference.

But for you fellows who ain't got a good faithful wife who'll do all the work, it's a different proposition.

I'll tell you the reason I ain't so sure to-day about a business man going into politics. There's something about politics that's against real work, and when a fellow gets in there, he gets the disease. The bigger the job a fellow can get and the less work he has to do, the better he thinks he's making out as a politician. That's the way they size up their success as politicians, it seems to me—look around and see how it works among the fellows you know yourself.

When a fellow, as I say, gets in that kind of thing and then tries to go back and work hard at his business, why he simply can't do it, that's all there is about it. Maybe once in a while he can, but if he's the average man, he can't. He's plumb spoiled forever.

I had a customer who went into politics and got to be United States Marshal. He had a good business, too—made him a good living and then some. I think he got $3,000 or $4,000 out of being Marshal, and he held the job for five or six years. His business went along at the same time, but it was pretty well dried up when he stopped being Marshal and went back to it. Think he could knuckle down again? He could not. He tried hard enough, know that, but everything about him had changed color if you know what I mean. Good money for darned little work—that's what he'd been used to for five years in his political job—and he couldn't see going back to the trenches again for long hours and half the pay.

After he'd tried for a year or so, he made out so poor that he sold the store and went into the real estate business, which is a pretty punk business, too, if you ask me. A cousin of mine is in it. He'll sell a house to-day and make $100, and then he won't sell a lath for three months. Oh it would put me plumb in the dippy house—the real estate business would. I've got to see something coming regular every day.

But as I was saying. I had another customer that went into politics, too. His business didn't get so much hurt, because he had one of those good faithful wives like I've got that'll do all the work. The only thing that's happened to him is that his wife has got sore on him for loafing around with politics all the time, and they're having trouble that way. He's liable to trade off a good wife for his politics. Some trade, ain't it?

This man is a bang-up business man, when his mind's on it. It ain't often been on it, at least not altogether, since I've known him. He's always had fads. Once it was race horses, and another time it was baseball, and another time it was something else, and so on. When he could put his mind down to his store, he could make it sing—he could drum up more business in a day than an ordinary fellow could in a week—good business that would stick.

Finally he got into politics and began to smell around and run for things. Not things that paid him anything much, but just for the sport of running for 'em. He was school trustee once and on the township committee once, and county collector or something once, and by this time the bee had built its nest in his bonnet and wouldn't leave. He was in politics for keeps. All this time his wife, who's got a head of her own, had been having to look after the thing more and more, and that was all right until she had a little baby, and then she got sore to the limit because she had to turn it over to a hired girl and come down town every day and run his store. You can't blame her—she'd have been a punk mother if she hadn't felt that way.

Now I don't suppose that in all the years this man has been carrying on with his little country politics he's made anything like the extra money he could have made out of his business if he'd plugged at it. With him it don't seem to be the coin so much—he's simply hungry for politics. He likes to have people feel that he's right in with all the big bugs and can stick

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Put Something Back of "Good Morning."—Any one who has devoted some thought to psychology in business knows the importance of the right and wrong mental attitude of clerks toward customers.

Since the power of thought is a fact, is not the store a wonderful field for its operation?

Is "Good Morning" a lip salutation or do you put something back of it? We believe that the more thought, the more heartiness, the more real welcome you put into your greeting just so much more do you get out of it.

Every obstacle which hinders the sincerity of the welcome should be eliminated. You will probably agree that the commonest of these obstacles is getting behind on your stock or shelf work and allowing your department to become for the time disorderly. We have time and again seen men in such a nervous condition over this that the approach of a customer might be dreaded. Can a fellow put anything constructive back of his "Good Morning" under such a condition? Should say not.

While writing this I can easily see where the management is to blame many times by thoughtlessly crowding work and stupidly limiting the time that such work must be done. It's a mistake.

"The Customer First."

And it's your privilege as a salesma to allow no other work to interfer with the "first cause."

ASSOCIATION NEWS.

Iowa State Retail Merchants' Association.

Secretary John A. Cunningham, of the Iowa State Retail Merchants' Association, is sending out copies of a resolution favoring the reduction of the weight of parcel post packages. The resolution is most comprehensive and is worthy of the recommendation of all merchants' associations. It is to be hoped that this resolution will serve as an incentive, not only for resolutions by other associations, but for active work on the part of the associations and the merchants throughout the country. Following is the resolution:—

Whereas, The rates of the parcel post are so low for excessive distances and the charge for shipment is in such unjust and unfair proportion to the haul that neither the Government nor the railroads are receiving sufficient compensation to cover cost of service rendered, and a large amount of trade that legitimately belongs to the inhabitants of the State of Iowa is being diverted to the great cities of the land in distant States. This policy is depriving thousands of our best and brightest young men and women of their birthright by forcing them to emigrate from the State in order that they may have a chance in the world; and

Whereas, These great concerns in distant cities do not contribute in any way to the revenues of the State of Iowa, nor do they in any way assist in the education of the youth of our State. They build no roads or bridges and bear none of our many burdens incident to the development of Iowa; and

Whereas, They are waxing fat upon the trade they take from our State and are fast developing into great monopolies that bid fair to equal, if not excel, in size the greatest manufacturing concerns in the land; and

Whereas, It is the policy of Iowa to provide work and opportunity for all its children, and we believe the Federal Government, of which we are a part, should not tax the people to reimburse losses in the parcels post service when these losses are incurred in establishing great monopolies that are fast sapping the life of our cities and towns, and depriving our children of a place and opportunity in their own community; now, therefore, be it

Resolved, By the Senate of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, the House concurring, That the Postmaster-General and the Congress of the United States be, and they are hereby requested and petitioned to reduce the weight of the parcels post package to a maximum of 40 pounds and make such readjustment in our postal rates and zones as will eventually make each class self-supporting, to the end that justice may be done as between all of the citizens of the United States, and that the unjust discrimination that now exists against the State of Iowa may be removed.

A Meat Slicer That Computes!

There is now a machine on the market known as the Climax Computing Sanitary Slicer that not only slices meats, but also weighs it and tells you how much to charge; a great machine for any one handling slicing meats. It is made by a good firm—the Anderson Computing Scale Co., of Anderson, Ind. —substantially built and moderately priced. The machine is so constructed that it comes with or without a pedestal and with or without the scale.—Advt.

We Appeal to the Grocer— We Do Not Try to Force Him

When we started to put Goldenoyle on the market, we could have gone to the consumer alone and tried to persuade her to force you to handle it.

We don't believe in that. We advertised to you before we advertised to anybody else, because we had confidence, and still have, that you can judge good merchandise on its merits, and will meet a manufacturer half way on a worthy proposition.

Goldenoyle is a good proposition from any standpoint. It is the most highly refined vegetable salad oil on the market—we say that from twenty-five years' experience as oil refiners. You remember what Prof. Allyn, the Westfield chemist, said about it.

Packed 4 doz., 7-oz. bottles; 2 doz. small cans, 21¾ oz. each; and 1 doz. ½-gal. cans. On 3-case order we prepay the freight. Beautiful recipe book for retailers' customers.

346.—Protecting One's Self Against a Partner.

Here is a man who is certainly taking an unusual precaution. I observe that if it had been taken oftener there would be fewer mismated partnerships:—

Utica, N. Y.

I have read a number of articles on partnership law, some of yours among them, and as I am about to take a partner into my business for the first time in my life, I wish to ask you a question about the matter. I understand that when a partner acts his fellow-partner is bound, and the danger is that the fellow-partner may in that way be compelled to stand for things, and perhaps for monetary losses, which he would wish to escape. I have known of cases myself where a fellow-partner has been betrayed and sometimes robbed by his partner, and what I wish is some knowledge which will put me where I can guard against anything of this sort. I have every confidence in the man I am taking in, but of course I do not know how he will act when raised to a partner. Do you believe in taking partners as a general proposition?

As to whether I believe in taking a partner, I answer that I do only when new capital is needed, and the only way to get it is to take a partner. As a rule the owner of a business which is so good that somebody is willing to pay money for a share in it, can get his new capital from his bank. He does not need to sell part of his business.

If what is wanted is not more capital, but somebody to do part of the executive work, I should never go to the length of taking a partner just for that. I should hunt up somebody and hire him, insuring his personal interest by giving him an interest in the profits.

I have seen so many partnerships break on the rocks of controversy and litigation that it has made me very skeptical about partnership as a general proposition. It is almost as much of a lottery as marriage. The trouble is that partnership is based on the law of agency. Each partner is the agent of all the others, and binds all the others. It follows that there are so many ways in which one partner can be betrayed by another, either through ignorance, bad judgment or positive dishonesty, that every day that he lives with a partner he is taking a dozen chances. Of course there are partnerships that are perfectly successful—thousands of them—but sometimes I think that partnerships in which all partners are satisfied and contented, are in a very small minority.

The above correspondent asks how he shall protect himself from being betrayed into anything by the partner he is about to take. It occurs to me that a man about whom one feels like taking a precaution like this, should not be taken as a partner at all. However, I should not intrude my personal opinions on that phase of the matter. I will do what I can to answer this correspondent's question.

Generally speaking, anything that one partner does, in the ordinary course of business and within the scope of it, will-bind the firm. It will bind the firm even though the partner who does it has been positively told by his fellow-partners not to do it. A partner has a very wide latitude under the law. I cannot of course go into the whole question of partnership law here, but broadly speaking, the chief things for one partner to watch, in connection with his fellow-partner, are as follows:—

1—The question of drawing checks against the partnership funds. One partner can usually draw a check in the firm name or endorse checks payable to the firm. The only way to absolutely safeguard this is to have both partners sign or countersign the checks.

2—The question of pledging the firm's credit. One partner has an almost unlimited right to pledge the firm's credit for the purposes of the business. Many a firm has had its back broken by being made to take on obligations, through the act of one partner, which it should never have taken on.

3—The question of making promissory notes in the firm's name. Generally speaking a partner can sign the firm name to a note and bind the partnership.

4—The question of mortgaging the firm's personal property to raise money. In States where chattel mortgages are possible, one partner can usually make a mortgage in the firm name on its personal property.

5—The question of a partner's honesty of business dealing. In many cases a partnership is liable for the fraud of one member in connection with the business, even though no one knew about it or was in sympathy with it, and even though the partner who perpetrated the fraud had been expressly forbidden to do it.

An example is the misappropriation of somebody's money. If A, a customer of B & Co., pays a bill to B, and B absconds with the money, without turning it into the firm, the bill is nevertheless paid. In one case, a customer of a partnership, desiring to pay a large account, left a check for considerably more than the account with the firm with instructions to put it through, retain enough to pay the account and send him a check for the difference. This was done, except as to the latter part of it. One of the firm used the balance of the money for his own purposes. The firm had to make it good.

6—The question of a partner's judgment. Where a member of tnership impulsively or ill ad-edly does something which gives nebody an action in damages, the n will have to pay those damages ny are recovered. For instance, one partner makes defamatory tements about somebody, in con-tion with the business, and that nebody sues, the firm will be re-nsible. If a partner brings ma-ous prosecution against some-ly, on behalf of the business; or es an improper attachment, or lates any law relating to the iness, and as a result a penalty to be paid, the firm will have to it.

The old offi-were elected. The Organizer made ort address and then the meeting urned to reconvene in the banquet of one of the hotels, where an rate banquet had been prepared. r the dinner had been enjoyed, rman Lawrence, of the Entertain-Committee, made a brief address and called upon President Bausum to act as toastmaster. Mr. Bausum congratulated the members on the success of the year and introduced as the first speaker T. T. Eckert, who spoke on "Pottsville, the Best Site in the Anthracite." He was followed by three-minute talks by the following: J. G. Andres, a visitor from Bloomsburg; Messrs. Kempfer and Sternberg, of the Philadelphia press; W. J. Sheldon, of the Bell Telephone Co.; Messrs. Hoopes, Knapp, Underwood, C. P. Hoffman, Vice-President Schlaseman, Guy Raine, Wm. Dengler. William Smedley made the closing address.

Pottsville is about to install the boulevard system of street lighting and the association hopes to secure permanent meeting rooms and office this year.

Albert Kaiser and William Smedley addressed the retail cigar dealers of Philadelphia on January 4th in the Assembly Hall of the Chamber of Commerce Building. These men are about to form an association, to be known as the Liberty Cigar Stores Co. This will involve co-operate buying, the establishment of a wholesale house, joint advertising, etc. About 300 have already joined and it is expected to organize the entire State. It promises to be a success.

The East Liberty Wholesale Grocery Co. held its annual meeting on January 10th. The report for the year was received with great satisfaction. W. G. Gillenboth is the able manager.

Mr. Smedley has engagements to speak at Bradford, Connellsville, Waynesboro, Royersford, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Lancaster, Erie, Honesdale, Butler, Trevorton. He is ready to serve you—do you want him? If so, address him at 802 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

Lack of financial support is the cause of decay in many organizations. It is surprising how much a member expects and how little he is willing to give. The annual dues in some of the associations are so small that really nothing can be accomplished. To get business out of an organization you must put business in it. Some men expect a tremendous lot out of an investment of $5 per annum. The associations that are going ahead are those that provide proper financial support.

It would pay every association to get out a monthly bulletin for its members, to tell the things doing, done and to be accomplished. Keep the members posted—secrecy breeds suspicion.

How shall we increase attendance at our meetings? is a question frequently asked. First, hold regular meetings, and then make them so interesting that members will not want to stay away from them. There is certainly enough going on in town and business circles to interest the intelligent merchant, not only once a month, but once a week. Have a programme—carry it out. Have a smoker occasionally, with a little entertainment. Give the members something to discuss. Get them busy and keep them busy.

Have an employees' night once in a while. Get these helpers together. Show that you are interested in them. This will encourage them to work with you as well as for you.

Official Grades for Sweet Potatoes.

The Office of Markets and Rural Organization of the United States Department of Agriculture was called upon recently to assist in the establishment of temporary grades for the shipment and marketing of sweet potatoes in several of the potato sections. Investigations were carried on at different sweet potato houses by an investigator from the Office. Conferences were also held with a number of growers, with the result that the following grades were arrived at and adopted:—

PRIME (OR NO. 1 BAKERS).

This grade will include all potatoes of one variety from 2 to 3 inches in diameter, with none over 7 inches in length, all to be fairly uniform in shape, clean, bright, natural color, and sound. This grade must be free from bruised, scarred, irregular, crooked, rotten or diseased potatoes.

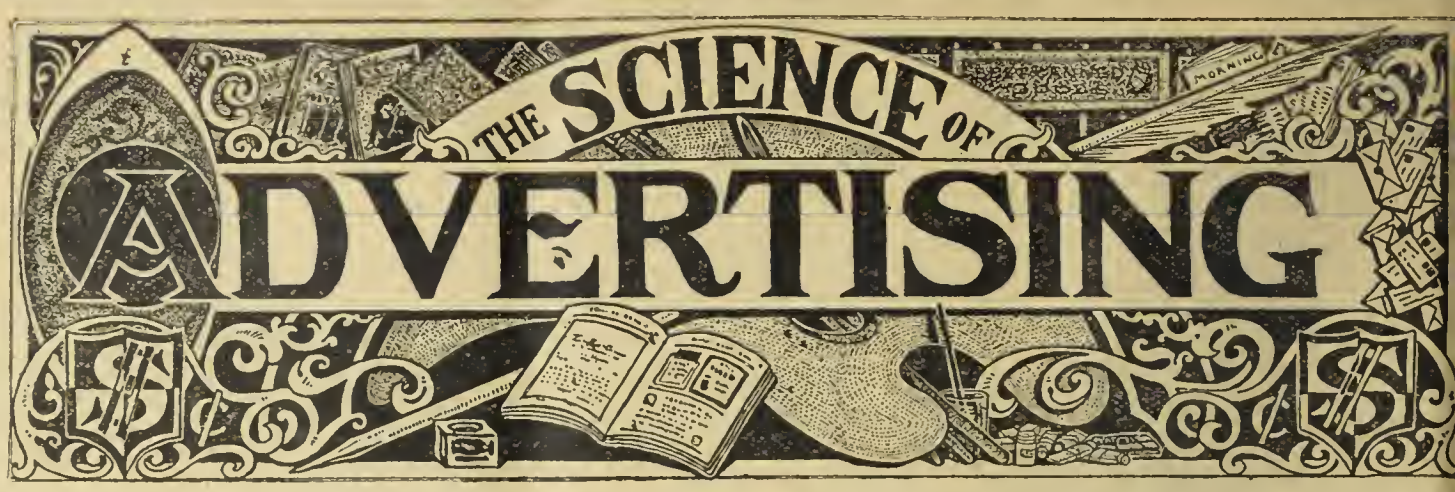
CHOICE (OR NO. 2 BAKERS).

This grade will include all potatoes of one variety from 1¾ to 3 inches in diameter, with none over 8 inches in length, all to be clean, bright, natural color, sound, and free from rot or disease. This grade may include crooked and irregular potatoes.

JUMBO.

This grade may include all potatoes of one variety over 3 inches in diameter, with none over 8 inches in length, all to be clean, bright, natural color, sound, and free from rot or disease.

These suggested grade rules have been submitted to several of the leading commission merchants and buyers in different markets and the concensus of opinion seems to be that a strict observance of these rules by the growers and shippers of the entire South would be instrumental in the elimination of much ungraded stock and the broadening of the market, thus placing the industry on a more stable and profitable basis.



I shall reproduce this week a sample of rather unique advertising. It is a New Year's letter issued by the Bradshaw Co., the New York popcorn people. It was printed in typewriter facsimile on one of the regular Bradshaw letterheads:—

A NEW YEAR'S GREETING TO OUR FRIENDS AND CUSTOMERS.

We send these words to you in part payment of what we owe you, for it is not only MONEY that makes the real debit and credit of human beings. There are such things as Cheer, Contentment, Hope, Gratitude, Energy and all the joy class, on the one hand, and Fear, Discouragement, Worry, Anger and such like on the other.

THESE have a deal more to do with our happiness or misery than Money; in fact, the ONLY USE we have for money is to obtain by it, directly or indirectly these "spiritual goods" and to get rid of the "spiritual depressants".

From you we have got some money the past year, for which we tried to give you value received, but from you we also received CERTAIN PLEASURES - the feeling of co-operation, the gratifying sense of doing business with honest folks - the joy of reciprocal service, and in fine, that peculiar sensation of well-being and fortunate adjustment that is the BEST REWARD of business people. For that we can NEVER PAY you, but at least we can and do hereby acknowledge the debt; accept, therefore, our GOOD WISHES! and credit our account with them.

May your affairs prosper this year AS NEVER BEFORE! MAY you EARN more money than you expect, and collect ALL you earn! May your OLD customers stick to you and NEW one's come aplenty! May all you do be APPRECIATED! also the things you refrain from doing!

If you have a wife may you be WORTHY of her love, and if you have children may you be at least, half as good as THEY THINK you are!

When you have bad luck may you be a GOOD SPORT, and come up smiling, and when you have good luck may it NOT make a fool of you!

Whatever kind of life you may have this year, may you have A GOOD TIME LIVING IT!

Sincerely,
BRADSHAW COMPANY.

I consider the value of occasional advertising of this sort very considerable. By advertising of this sort I mean advertising that approaches the customer from a different angle. As a rule there is only one angle between a retailer and his customer. The customer comes in the store more or less often, buys what goods he wants, and goes out. Probably they seldom or never see each other in any other way or on any other basis. That means that the relation between them is entirely cold, and almost completely devoid of anything personal. Don't you see how much stronger the relation will be if, in addition to the business relation, you can introduce something just a little personal? Something calculated to make the customer think of you in a different way? There isn't any doubt about it. I remember listening once to a woman who had lost a boy and who had received a letter about it from her groc He wrote a nice little note, sayi that he was sorry to hear of t boy's death, that he had oft noticed him playing around and seemed such a bright little fello and so on. That woman said th the grocer's letter affected her mo than any other phase of the incide Why? Simply because she did expect anything like that from hi It put the grocer in a different lig before her. And I have no dou that that woman will think a go deal longer now before she tra fers her trade to some other sto at least as long as the present one reasonably satisfactory. There something personal in the ca now; there was practically nothi before.

This Bradshaw advertisement b longs to the same category. Th is nothing about popcorn in it, it does a lot for the Bradshaw po corn—it helps to make the Bra shaw people seem like good peo to buy popcorn from. And whil have no idea that the Bradshaw C will get any orders which will s "I am sending this order beca of your New Year's letter," all same I have no doubt that they w get some which will be influen by it. And even if every one those orders would have come a way, nevertheless there will h been a gain if they come in a li warmer and more personal spi "I send you this order becaus like you," which was written on bottom of an order I saw once the greatest security in the wo that other orders will come, as l as the liking continues.

Certainly This Is Selfishness

Is there any selfishness in manufacturers advertising in this way? Certainly. All business is intelligent selfishness. We want your specialty order business for stamped goods, of course. But we are also arguing for your interest, and if you have signed many unstamped orders and had the experience that many retailers have had with them, particularly the way jobbers look on them now that the stamp has come in such general use, you will understand what we mean.

Either of the above stamps on a specialty order is as good as a bond given to you by the manufacturer for the prompt, correct and faithful performance of the agreement. The manufacturer giving this so-called bond is always responsible in every way.

Don't Make This Mistake

¶ If you don't handle Wheatena, don't put it down as "just another of those breakfast foods." Wheatena is as different from the others as tea is different from coffee. If it wasn't it wouldn't sell as it does, for we spend one dollar in advertising where the others spend ten.

¶ Wheatena is the hearts of fine wheat, prepared as no one else could do it. Guaranteed without limit to everybody.

This Washes

¶ This is not an advertising exaggeration. Chase-O, put in with the clothes and a little soap, will wash and blue those clothes better than human hands can do it. For a nickel!

¶ Do you doubt that your women customers will buy Chase-O? Pays a good profit, and sells—sells—sells.

NEW LARGE Pound Package
ONLY 5 CENTS
To the Consumer
The New Package of Babbitt's 1776 Soap Powder

has every feature in its favor to make it the biggest and fastest seller you ever handled. It's a pure soap powder of wonderful cleansing power, and means "Freedom from Drudgery" for the housewife. The big pound package that costs only 5 cents is the biggest moneysworth she can buy, and that pleases her. The Trade Marks are good for beautiful and useful presents. If you'll keep 1776 Soap Powder on display and mention its features to customers, you'll find it easy to put a few packages in every order.

Business Story of 1915 Told in Record of Failures

Year Was More Disastrous Than Any Year for Five Years. Record for December Last, However, Compares Well With Every December for the Last Five Years Except December, 1914.

An interesting story is told in the official reports of mercantile failures for the past year, for the last five years, and for the month of December. Generally speaking, the record of failures for 1915 is larger than for the last five years. December, 1915, however, shows up much better than December, 1914, and compares favorably with the same month in the five previous years.

Following are the figures for December in the various lines:—

General Stores.—December, 1915, 164; liabilities, $1,450,352; December, 1914, 247; liabilities, $2,577,236. The number of failures in 1913 was 154; in 1912, 163, and in 1911, 129.

Grocery Stores.—December, 1915, 317; liabilities, $1,422,817; December, 1914, 286; liabilities, $1,134,464. In 1913, 218; in 1912, 196; in 1911, 194.

Dry Goods.—December, 1915, 91; liabilities, $1,188,928; December, 1914, 116; liabilities, $1,728,025. In 1913, 79; in 1912, 54; in 1911, 66.

Shoes.—December, 1915, 39; liabilities, $275,255; December, 1914, 53; liabilities, $358,275. In 1913, 35; in 1912, 39; in 1911, 25.

Hardware.—December, 1915, 38; liabilities, $501,643; December, 1914, 23; liabilities, $297,092.

Also interesting is the record of failures in the various lines for each year for the last five years, which is as follows:—

General stores, 1915, 2,334; 1914, 1,780; 1913, 1,615; 1912, 1,777; 1911, 1,380.

Grocery stores, 1915, 3,614; 1914, 3,022; 1913, 2,771; 1912, 2,597; 1911, 2,134.

Dry Goods, 1915, 1,179; 1914, 916; 1913, 728; 1912, 786; 1911, 671.

Shoes, 1915, 568; 1914, 453; 1913, 453; 1912, 411; 1911, 349.

Hardware, 1915, 491; 1914, 351; 1913, 341; 1912, 287; 1911, 302.

The above shows that the year 1915 was the most disastrous in the last five years.

Lastly comes the record of commercial failures during the year 1915, classified as to States. This is presented below. It is consistent with all the other reports and shows that in 1915 there were 22,156 failures in all lines, as against 18,280 in 1914:—

Produce Men Say Railroads Are Gouging Them on Freight Rates.

Philadelphia produce men appeared before the Interstate Commerce Commission during the week in protest against the icing charges imposed by railroad carriers upon producers, shippers and receivers of butter, eggs, poultry and other perishable foods. This was also the final argument in the case which has caused a widespread protest from produce exchanges, and it is declared if this charge is continued the price of foods affected will be increased to the consumer. After receiving permission from the Commission to increase rates 5 per cent., it is charged that the railroads arbitrarily, unjustly and without permission of the Commission added to freight bills a so-called cost of icing commissions, which, in effect, raised the rate of freight from 10 to 12 per cent. additional. It is this increase of rates that is being fought, and the increase which perishable food producers and handlers ask the Commission to stop, and compel the railroads to refund that which they have unlawfully imposed and collected.

Thinks the Retailer is Retarding the Salmon Business.

Representative of a Large Western Salmon Company Says Retailers Don't Sufficiently Educate Their Trade to Buy Salmon Right.

I consider that the retailer is the most important of all the steps in selling salmon to the consumer, as he it is who comes directly in contact with the consumer, and he and his assistants by their efforts or lack of effort can increase or decrease the use of a commodity to a large extent. I feel, in talking to you gentlemen about your own business that I must approach the question with a great deal of humbleness, as I do not want to appear to be criticising the methods of the retailer or his assistant.

In the larger retail establishments we know there is a systematic effort made to continually push goods, but it is in the smaller establishments that we get more of the retarding process than anywhere else. Personally, if I were a retailer I would insist upon my assistants being familiar by taste with every commodity in the way of foodstuffs that I handle and be able to know from his own judgment what is wholesome and of the price that would interest the class of trade that he caters to. Take, for instance, in the salmon industry, there are quite a large number of people who think it cannot be good, wholesome salmon unless it is deep red, because we have educated for a long period of years that red salmon was the best, and probably it is from a standpoint of appearance and richness, but take pink salmon. This grade has just as high a value from a nutriment standpoint as any of the so-called higher grades. The flesh is tender, delicate and it would be difficult, I think, for anybody to close the eyes and detect the difference between a mouthful of pink salmon and a mouthful of red, and a can of pink salmon will make just as fine a fish chowder as a can of red. And if the retail salesmen will take the trouble to make suggestions to his customer who is in the habit of buying closely to meet the necessities of her purse, he will find these suggestions good, and the clerk will not only make a good sale, giving as good a percentage of profit, but at the same time serve his customer satisfactorily.

There have been from time to time books of recipes gotten out that show the various ways in which salmon can be cooked besides eating it in its orignal state fresh from the can, and these books are still obtainable, and I would recommend retailers to personally post themselves in regard to a few simple suggestions in the way of preparing this commodity, and I think you would find your salmon business would increase materially to the pleasure of your customers and to the profit of your store.

AMONG THE TRADE.

James P. Curry, who has for some time represented the Kellogg Toasted Corn Flakes Co. in Philadelphia, will be transferred to Chicago about February 1st. His successor will be Ralph Whitmore, who has been the same company's representative in Minneapolis. Mr. Curry is one of the strongest men in the Kellogg Co.'s employ.

L. P. Bryant, an advertising man well known in the trade, died at Dooner's Hotel, where he made his home, last Saturday after a brief illness of five weeks. He suffered from a complication of diseases, and was only forty-one years old. Mr. Bryant was formerly advertising manager for H. O. Wilbur & Son and later was connected with the C. M. Wessels Co. At the time of his death he was advertising manager for the S. S. White Dental Manufacturing Co. Bryant was a good, clean, likable chap and had many friends. He was the author of a feature which the "Ladies' Home Journal" is now conducting called "The Corpies," being instruction for children, in verse, as to the functions of the blood corpuscles ext of the Latest Victor Price-Fixing Decision. Proposed New Food Laws for New York State. Merchants' Association Will Back False Statement Law. Market Summary.

ecial Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, January 21, 1916.

The trade here, which are always interested in everything affecting the right a manufacturer to fix the retail ces of his products, have been sent in the air again by the decision of United States Circuit Court of Apals in the Victor Talking Machine e. The Victor suit was against R. H. acy & Co., the department store peo, who have been cutting the price of ctor machines and Victor records. e Victor Co. sued them in the lower irt for an injunction on the ground at they had not sold anything to acy, but had merely granted the right sell, on a sort of royalty scheme, on condition that Macy, the licensee, ould hold the price. The court deed against this contention, said the alty scheme was a subterfuge, the nsaction was a sale and Macy had a ht to cut if he liked. This contion the Circuit Court of Appeals v reverses. It says that the royalty eme is not a subterfuge and that it sufficient to enable the manufacturer dictate the price.

Following is the text of the decision:

This case presents the familiar ne of the manufacturer of a patnted article undertaking to exend its use and at the same time egulate the terms and conditions nder which it shall be used. It eeks to accomplish this in part by written contract entered into beween itself and every so-called liensed dealer to whom it delivers ie possession of instruments or recrds. This need not be recited, as substance it is the same as a o-called "License Notice" which is ttached to a conspicuous part of very machine. This notice varies nly in the statement of the amount f royalty, which of course is different for different types of maine. The notice affixed to every strument of the type known as ictrola XVI, reads as follows:—

LICENSE AGREEMENT.

(Here follows the agreement on hich the Victor Co. relied for its ower to dictate the retail price. ubstantially, it attempts to reserve tle to the manufacture and is a ense to handle the Victor appatus under the Victor patents. A oyalty" is required, corresponding the retail price of the machine id the records. Everything is on ondition that the retail price be aintained.)

A somewhat similar License otice is affixed to every sound recd or its envelope.

A study of these various documents leads to the conclusion that mplainant has undertaken to oid making such a sale of its maine as would permanently pass it yond any further control by itself. e think it has succeeded in so ing; this is not a sale outright, a conditional or restricted sale, any sale at all.

Under the authorities the owner of a patent who manufactures machines under such patent can give the right to use to whom he pleases upon what conditions he may choose to impose. Some of those conditions may involve pecuniary return, such as royalties, rentals for fixed periods, specified lump sum compensation for the whole period. We do not see why he may not give to one person a more restricted right to use than he does to another. The Dick case, 224 U. S. 1, establishes the proposition that a restriction to use only with other products of the patentee is legitimate. Of course, the giving to any person of a "right to use" things of this sort is an idle thing unless the person is also supplied with the physical thing to be used, to hold the same while he is enjoying the use and complying with its terms.

Turning now to the license notice. What is granted by the patentee is "only the right to use" the particular machine, unaltered, without parts not manufactured by the Victor Co., maker and owner of the patents, and only with records and needles made by the Victor Co., and to use it only so long as the notice, unerased and unaltered, remains on the machine. The term for which this right to use is granted is a fixed period "for the term of the patent having the longest term to run"—this term is ascertainable with precision by reference to the notice affixed to the machine which enumerates all the patents.

The character of the use is not the same in all cases.

1. To "Victor distributors" there is given a right to use only for "demonstrating."

As the sole result of demonstration is to induce the public to get the machines, it may be assumed that these distributors are paid by the Victor Co.

2. To regularly licensed "Victor dealers" there is also given a right to use for "demonstrating" purposes. Sometimes conveyance of such right to use is made directly by the Victor Co. to the licensed Victor dealer. Sometimes the conveyance is made to the "dealer" by the "demonstrator," who by the terms of the notice is expressly authorized to convey such right to the dealer. These dealers, of course, do not use these machines for their personal enjoyment; their demonstrations are given to induce the public to apply for machines, and they are paid by a commission on the amount paid by every person who may be induced by them to take one.

3. To the public, i. e., the individuals who wish to use the machines generally.

Suckers.

This is from the Philadelphia "Record" of last Wednesday:—

Representing himself as an agent for the Rome Importing and Supply Co., with "offices all over the United States," Alfreda Guglichino, alias Alfreda Williams, 25 years old, was arrested in Camden yesterday by City Detective Trancome on a charge of obtaining money under false pretenses. Judging from papers found in his pockets, the accused man left victims in many cities.

About two years ago the same man, it is charged, swindled a number of grocers out of sums of money as an agent of the Eureka Supply Co. It was through a description furnished the Detective Bureau in Camden, after his disappearance at that time, that brought about the arrest yesterday.

Williams' method, according to the police, was to enter a small retail grocery store, offer goods at an unusually low price and promise shipment within a few days. The buyer was obliged to pay him 10 per cent. of the order in advance before he would consent to deliver the goods. Williams received thousands of dollars in this manner and evidence in the hands of the Camden police shows that grocers in that city alone have lost a total sum of nearly $4,000.

Sometimes I am inclined to doubt whether the old proverb about a sucker being born every minute, goes far enough. My thought is that perhaps it would be truer to have said—at least, to say now—that a sucker is born every second. And it is perfectly amazing how many of them get into the grocery business. All that seems necessary is to agree to do an obviously impossible thing, and down goes the grocer's name and often his money.

Why can't everybody remember that goods represent a certain value, which nobody can cut down much unless he stole them, and that any man offering anything at below the recognized value is either an outright crook or is scheming to put something over.

Losing Customers Who Are Already Sold.

One day last week a man went into the Philadelphia office of the Chalmers Motor Car Co. to buy a car. He had been some time deciding, but after considering all the makes of cars at about his price, he deliberately decided upon the Chalmers, and went to the Philadelphia branch with a check in his pocket intending to be the owner of a Chalmers before he left.

The salesman into whose hands he fell, in five minutes entirely changed the customer's mind for him. He was brusque, grumpy, unpleasant and uncivil. He did not possess sufficient salesmanship to sell a customer who was already sold, so the customer went out without buying. Instead, he went nearby to the Hudson branch and bought a Hudson.

How many such salesmen—or clerks—do men have in their employ without knowing it? Recently I asked a large retailer as to the relative merits, as salesmen, of two of his principal clerks. He did not know. It is conceivable that neither was selling enough to make himself profitable for the house, or that one was making money for his employer while the other was not. But the employer did not know.

If a salesman cannot sell a customer who has already sold himself, how can he possibly sell one who has to be sold from the beginning? And more, how can any sane employer have such a man in his employ without knowing it? No matter what kind of a store it is, or how small, every employer ought to know what his clerks' sales are.

Outside Opinion on Present Grocery Trend.

This is from "Associated Advertising," which necessarily sees the thing from quite a different standpoint than the grocer:—

The grocer, selling more goods than a year ago, and collecting more promptly, is looking about for new fields to conquer in many sections. He is beginning to realize that the people have the means with which to provide themselves with luxuries that were forbidden to them a year ago. In many cities the grocer has begun to cash in on the public's ability to buy, adding a larger proportion of high-grade food products. He is finding that in addition to buying bare necessities less carefully, the people will buy the more expensive kinds of fruits, canned goods, meats, etc., with more freedom.

If this is true, and I believe in a measure at least, it undoubtedly is, it holds a suggestion for some retailers who are competing with Economy stores. Economy stores, as a rule, do not sell fancy groceries. They confine themselves almost entirely to staples. Therefore a store which uses the present opportunity to push higher grade goods than the Economy store keeps, to such extent as it succeeds, puts itself beyond the competition of the Economy store. It is a nice business—selling the finer things. They appeal to the best classes of customers, they are not usually sold at a cut price, and they practically always pay a good profit. It is business well worth going after, especially as it involves no particular investment and nothing more than a little effort.

The Victor Decision.

The latest decision in the Victor price-fixing case has to do only with patented articles. The Victor Talking Machine Co. have for years successfully protected their prices by all sorts of schemes, the latest of which was based on this idea: they would not "sell" their machines or their records to dealers at all. They would merely grant a dealer a license to sell under their patents, the license being based on the condition that the licensee should sell at fixed prices only. The money which the licensee paid the Victor Company was not the price of the goods, but a "royalty." Of course the royalty was always the same sum as the price.

The Macy department store violated this agreement by cutting prices, and the Victor Company went into court and claimed the right to take away all the unsold machines and records in Macy & Co.'s stock and to prevent the further sale of Victor goods. The lower court said no, but the Appeal Court has just said yes. The latter court upholds the scheme thus:

> The authorities permit the owner of a patent who manufactures machines under such patent to give the right to use to whom he pleases upon what conditions he may choose to impose. Some of these conditions may involve pecuniary terms, such as royalties, rentals for fixed periods, or a specified lump sum compensation for the whole period.

So that neither Macy & Co. nor anybody else will now be able to cut Victor prices unless the United States Supreme Court, to which the case will be taken, reverses.

But as stated, only manufacturers of patented articles can get any advantage out of this decision.

The Salesman Who Couldn't Sell Himself

I happened the other day to hear a salesman applying for a job. I witnessed from beginning to end his effort to sell his own services to a man who wanted some services and who sat there willing to be convinced that he should buy the services then being offered him.

What I heard and saw inspires the observation that if a salesman's ability to sell was judged by the way he often goes about selling himself, there would be very few jobs given out.

This man may have been, as a salesman of merchandise, a veritable crack-a-jack. But as a salesman of services, and those his own, he was as unconvincing as if he knew he was a crook and a loafer.

Why is it? I suppose because there was a personal interest at stake which made the man nervous. Perhaps he needed the job very badly. Anxiety colored everything he said and did, for no anxious man can be entirely calm and level headed.

This man did want the job he was after and evidently wanted it badly. His fear lest he should lose it l[ed] him into the mistake of boasti[ng] about himself. He bloated a[nd] bragged about the big jobs he h[ad] had, how he was regarded as t[he] biggest man in the house, how t[he] boss consulted him about ever[y] thing, and how many big men w[ere] waiting that minute for him to [go] le whether he would "accept" a sition with them.

It was all a pitiful pretense. Half eye could see that the man was lating his record. If that man d been selling groceries or hard- are or woolens, there probably uld not have been a trace of that ckyism that put him at his rst.

He did not get the job, though may have been just the man for

I never saw a man hired quicker n on another occasion when I o sat by.

'Why did you leave your last ce?" asked the manager.

'I was fired because I couldn't along with the sales manager," s the answer.

The minute that was said I ac- ired confidence in that man and so did the manager who was listening to his story. As the latter said to me afterward: "I believe in a fellow who has the nerve to come right out with it like that. Most of 'em try to cover everything up that they think might hurt their chances."

The way to apply for a job is to tell the bad with the good, if for no other reason than to create the impression that you are truthful and fair. It is astonishing what an appealing effect candor has on a man who is being asked for a job. The minute an applicant shows the courage to tell something on himself, that minute the manager or employer begins to hope that he can make use of a man so obviously truthful. In other words, the application from then on is backed by the man who is to pass upon it.

The Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Act.

Tamaqua, Pa., Jan. 17, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Let me know a few things of the new labor law that has taken effect January 1, 1916. Does the merchant have to insure his clerks? Can we have the clerks sign off their rights of insurance? Where can I get the full information of the new law?

Yours truly,
P. BRACHMAN.

This correspondent refers to the new Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Act, which went into effect January 1st. The act has been reproduced by this paper and thoroughly discussed from all standpoints. For several months we carried a weekly feature called "Suggested Cases Under the Compensation Act," which showed how the act affected the average retailer.

In a nutshell, the average retail merchant must take out insurance to pay his employees, if injured by accident occurring in connection with the business, the sums the law requires under various circumstances. He can refuse to do this if he likes, but if an accident happens and an injured employee sues him, he will go into court robbed of several of his most valuable defenses.

You cannot make an agreement with your clerks to waive compensation. The act expressly provides that any such agreement shall be void.

We advise writing the Bureau of Workmen's Compensation, Harrisburg, Pa., for additional information.

Apparently such conveyances are not made directly by the manufacturer; they are made by the "Victor Distributors," or by "licensed Victor Dealers," who are expressly empowered to make such conveyances. For each one of such machines the person to whom a right to use the same is granted and a machine delivered, to be by him used, shall pay a lump sum, which varies with the type of machine.

This is called a royalty; in effect it is a payment in advance covering use for the entire term—down to the expiration of the last patent. During such term, the restrictions as to parts, integrity of notice, needles, records, etc., are in force and the manufacturer reserves title in itself. Of course, when the patents expire no such restrictions could be maintained and, therefore, when that time comes any licensee (or user) in whose hands a machine may be and who has faithfully observed the conditions, shall receive full title to the same.

The documents are long and complicated, but it seems to us that this is what they provide for. We do not know why, under the law and the authorities a patentee may not thus dispose temporarily of the use and ultimately of the title of a machine made by him and protected by his patent.

There is considerable controversy here over a bill just introduced in the New York Legislature regarding the use of preservatives and coloring matter in food products. The bill defines a preservative as "any substance capable of being added to a food or beverage, or an ingredient thereof, for the purpose or result of concealing, hindering or preventing the natural change, decay or deterioration thereof, except alcohol and condiments such as salt, pepper, vinegar and the like." This would undoubtedly include benzoate of soda as a preservative, for that is added for the purpose of hindering a decay which would otherwise take place. The bill also defines coloring matter as "any substance capable of being added to a food or drug for the purpose of changing the appearance thereof."

The bill does not prohibit the use of all preservatives and coloring matter, but provides new restrictions for their use. The manufacturer must file a complete statement covering his use of either with the Commissioner of Agriculture.

If a retailer sells food containing either coloring matter or preservatives, he must place a sign or placard giving all the facts of the case in his store. This, of course, would give a black eye to any product named in it, and is the foundation for the fight which will undoubtedly be made against the bill by various manufacturers.

The Merchants' Association of New York has approved the bill introduced in Congress by Mr. Kreider "prohibiting fraud upon the public by making or disseminating false statements or assertions concerning any merchandise, commodities or securities or service."

The Merchants' Association, in its letter commending the bill, suggests that it be amended by the specific naming of notices, handbills, posters, bills, signs, placards, cards, labels or tags.

The green coffee interests of New York held a meeting here in the week to discuss the proposed plan for conducting a campaign in the interest of the use of more coffee by the public. It was decided to carry on this campaign by the last meeting of the National Coffee Roasters' Association, and a committee was appointed for the purpose. A brief, tentative plan was submitted at the meeting held this week and the meeting decided to work in conjunction with the representatives of the roasted coffee interests.

A large mass meeting of retailers was held in Madison Square during the week to discuss the Stevens Bill, now pending in Congress, which would give the manufacturer the right to fix the retail price on trade-marked goods. Another resolution was adopted favoring the bill.

The twenty-eighth annual convention of the New York State Wholesale Grocers' Association was held on Thursday and Friday at the Hotel Biltmore, with about 100 present. The following officers were elected, mostly being re-elections: President, Thomas B. Ward, Jr., of Weidman, Ward & Co., Albany, N. Y.; first vice-president, Sylvan J. Stix, of Seeman Bros., New York; second vice-president, E. S. Truesdell, of Newell & Truesdell, Binghamton, N. Y.; third vice-president, Edward Cumpson, of T. & E. Cumpson, Buffalo, N. Y.; treasurer, Howard L. Sills, of John S. Sills & Sons, New York, and secretray, Nelson Gray (elected by the directors), New York.

The principal object of discussion was the Stevens Bill and whether the association should aid its passage. The speakers were Prof. Paul H. Heystrom, representing the American Fair Trade League, who was in favor of the bill, and Percy Straus, of R. H. Macy & Co., who was against the bill.

Various other trade subjects were discussed, among them the growth of buying exchanges among retailers, which was discussed by Nelson Gray. Mr. Gray said that the rapid growth of these organizations in the New York district demanded careful attention on the part of wholesale grocers. He included chain stores in his discussion. It was generally agreed that 1915 was a good year for New York jobbers.

Summarized Market Conditions.

Tea fairly active at about unchanged prices, although India-Ceylons are very firm and higher in primary markets—Coffee somewhat heavier than a week ago in spite of short freight facilities from Brazil. Demand quite light and prices on Rio and Santos a shade easier for the week. Milds quiet and unchanged, with the outlook for somewhat lower prices.—Sugar firmer. Raws quoted at 4.83 cents and granulated at 5.85 cents. All granulated up 10 points. —Spot tomatoes still higher and firm. Demand for immediate wants. Some future tomatoes selling at 80 cents. Peas and corn unchanged for the week, with corn relatively firmer than peas. —Salmon unchanged, with chums and medium reds becoming very scarce. Pinks are also low in supply. Prices unchanged, with outlook firm. Domestic sardines firm and well maintained. —Spot prunes somewhat firmer.—Other dried fruits unchanged.—Currants somewhat easier than they were and still show a firm undertone.—Wheat erratic and quite sensitive.—Flour about 25 cents per barrel firmer for the week, with the local supply still small on account of congested freights.

Baking Powder Hearing Develops Nothing.

Only Question Discussed is Squabble Between Jacques and Calumet Companies Over Whether the Latter Company Shall Be Allowed to Use Albumen to Make "Egg" Test.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
January 20, 1916.

The hearing on baking powder standards was held during the week before the Federal Food and Drugs Board. The point discussed was not the old controversy over cream of tartar and alum, as many expected, but the Western baking powder controversy which I believe has been referred to in your columns, between the Jacques Baking Powder Co. and the Calumet Baking Powder Co. over the egg albumen test. All of the large baking powder companies were represented, but took no part in the hearing. Several Western food commissioners in whose territories the above contest was waged, were also present.

The chief point advanced was the egg albumen issue, the chief controversialists being, as had been predicted, the Jacques interests of Chicago, opposing egg albumen and the "water glass test," and the Calumet Baking Powder Co., contending that egg was harmless and not a means for making the water glass test fraudulently. The American Baking Powder Association appeared in support of the Jacques contention.

The albumenites conducted an exposition of the "water glass test," using both albumenized and non-albumenized powders, from which their experts argued that the elimination of egg would only increase the chances for deception on a comparative test of the two types of powder.

The whole issue in a nutshell appears to be this: Shall a baking powder manufacturer be allowed to put albumen in his powder, when it has no effect on the leavening power, but merely allows a spectacular test to show that the powder has egg in it, which test is generally regarded as deceptive because there is no egg in it? It is not likely that the Board will do anything about it as it is regarded as largely a squabble between two manufacturers.

Controlling Food Colors.

A food inspection decision has been issued by the U. S. Department of Agriculture permitting the use of tartrazine in coloring food products. Investigations have shown this color to be harmless and suitable for coloring foods. It is manufactured in large quantities in the United States. Seven other coal-tar dyes have been permitted in foods since the enactment of the Food and Drugs Act. Samples of these dyes, certified by the manufacturers, are examined in the Bureau of Chemistry and only such dyes permitted as are free from impurities and harmful substances. Another decision has recently been issued making more stringent requirements in reference to the certification of coal-tar dyes when mixed with substances not coal-tar dyes. This decision provides that hereafter the manufacturer shall deposit with the Secretary of Agriculture a declaration that every package in which any such mixture is sold shall have a plain and conspicuous statement of the quantity or proportion of the certified dyes present in the mixture.

The Week's One-Time Ads.

Well, gentlemen and patriots, the Ferris people are back in this issue. They've got one of those page ads. of theirs in the paper this week, but this one talks more about the general question of ham. Every man of you sells ham and you're interested in the subject. Just see in that ad. how the Ferris ham gets about over the country. In the ad. there are letters about it from Montreal, from New Jersey, from Florida and from Kansas. Do you realize that the Ferris ham is selling over the United States, where there's a quality grocery store that has particular people to cater to. I've got a guess that you won't find many Economy stores handling them, and there's a point for you if you're alongside an Economy store. Sell the fine stuff like Ferris Hams and Bacon that people can't get anywhere else. JIMMY MANDE

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for week. The situation is generally lthy and firm, demand being active ull prices. Nobody seems to be will- at present to make any concessions desirable grades.

Coffee.

The coffee market, in spite of the tinued scarcity of freight facilities n Brazil, is still heavy, although the ance noted last week is still in part ntained. The demand is confined to ual wants; nobody seems to have ugh confidence in the market to an- pate wants very much. Rio 7s are scarce and firm. Milds quiet and hanged. Java and Mocha in quiet and.

Sugar.

he sugar market, which was com- tively weak in the early part of the k, strengthened considerably toward close and most refiners were quot- granulated at 5.85 cents. There is e beet granulated being offered, but information was given by some of largest companies that they would tly retire from the Eastern market, use they could get more money for sugar in other markets. Raws advanced during the week at least ent, largely because of the heavy and and of the lack of freight facil- from Cuba. The consumptive de- d for sugar is fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

he feature of the molasses market e very heavy price that is now be- obtained for black strap. This e, which is the lowest and poorest is not used for human consumption ll, is commanding a premium of ral cents per gallon on account of sefulness for the war. All grades olasses are ruling about normal on nt of scarcity. Sugar syrup is un- ged for the week, demand being . Compond syrup unchanged and .

Fish.

e approach of Lent has made but pple upon the mackerel situation. supply was small and prices high, the demand during Lent has not heavy during the last few years, in consequence prices are no higher although the feeling is somewhat r. Cod, hake and haddock are in nable demand at unchanged prices. on is selling fairly well at un- ged prices for the week. Domestic nes are moderately active at the ad- noted two weeks ago. Imported nes still very scarce and very firm.

Canned Goods.

matoes are about unchanged, most rs asking $1.05 in a large way, b. for standard Maryland 3s. The k is very firm. Spot corn is sell- well at about unchanged prices. Spot peas are still heavy, without inci- dent. Apples are unchanged and the principal demand of the year is ap- proaching. There is no indication of any radical fluctuation. California canned goods dull and in ordinary de- mand at unchanged prices. Small East- ern staple canned goods quiet and un- changed. There is much more business being done in future canned goods this year than was done last year. Toma- toes are being taken rather generally at 80 cents in a large way, f. o. b. This is from 10 to 15 cents above last year's future price. Packers are claiming as they did last year, that this year's cost of production is going to be much larger than in 1915. There is also some future corn selling, part of it on the same basis as last year and part of it (meaning particularly the New York brands) slightly above last year. Maine packers have not yet named future prices. Future peas are not being of- fered to any extent because there is no incentive to buy.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are practically unchanged from last week. There is a little better feeling on spot, but there is no sub- stantial difference as compared with a week ago. The consumptive demand for prunes is fair. Peaches and apri- cots are both unchanged on last week's basis; demand fair. Raisins are also unchanged, the situation being steady to firm and the demand fair. Currants are easier on account of increased supplies. The demand is moderate. There is a great scarcity of Fard dates, which will probably not be relieved for a consid- erable time. Hallowee dates are plen- tiful and unchanged.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans are maintained upon the high basis reported last week; demand fair. Marrows are unchanged on the basis of $4.75 per bushel, in a large way, f. o. b., but there is talk of advancing it on account of the scarcity and high prices of pea beans. California limas are also unchanged for the week, although some holders believe that they should advance in sympathy with pea beans. Green and Scotch peas unchanged and quiet.

Butter.

There is an active consumptive demand for all grades of butter and the market is healthy, with prices about the same as a week ago. The average quality of the butter arriving is good for the season and no important change seems in sight.

Eggs.

The egg market is steady and unchanged, with the receipts increasing every day. The consumptive demand is good and prices are about on the same level as a year ago. The weather for the next few weeks will decide the market.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm at an advance of ½ cent for the week. The consumptive demand is moderate, but there is a heavy demand for all grades for export. Stocks of cheese in storage considerably lighter than a year ago and the outlook is firm.

Provisions.

Everything in smoked meats is steady and unchanged, with a light consumptive demand. Pure and compound lard are both firm at an advance of about ¼ cent and a moderate consumptive demand. Barreled pork, canned meats and dried beef are all steady at unchanged prices.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Ordinarily large stocks of herrings are kept in Norway, but just at present the demand from the countries at war has been so very large that stocks are practically depleted. The only kind of herrings which are being offered from Norway now are the sloe herrings, a rather nice herring, which contains some milk and roe, and which ordinarily is eaten quite largely in the American market, but prices are so enormously high that little, if any, has been imported of these herrings this season. The herring trade in general is done on a hand-to-mouth basis, owing to the high prices prevailing for this food product, which as a rule is a necessity, but has now become a real delicacy, as the poor man cannot afford to buy herrings at prevailing prices.

Never before has there been as little sold of Holland herrings, all on account of the high prices.

Scotch herrings, of course, are selling, but unfortunately, real good stuff is hard to obtain.

The approaching Lent has stimulated the Norway mackerel trade to quite some extent, and in spite of the high prices, the trade is taking more interest in Norway mackerel than it has done since the beginning of the season.

There has been some catch of Norway sardines of late, but practically all that has been taken by the countries now at war, at prices which place those sardines entirely out of our reach for the American trade. Besides, most of the sardines caught were rather large fish, which are not desirable for sale here. No further shipments of sardines have come forward from Portugal of late on account of the poor catch and high prices.

The few sprats which have been caught of late in France have been sold at such enormous prices that we could not dream of importing them here. The market here is practically bare of all kinds of sprats. Naturally, the prevailing high prices for sardines have restricted the consumption. If this were not so, imported sardines would be selling at very much higher prices than they are now and there would be practically none available.

The demand for all goods in our line continues steady and good, and business on the whole is very satisfactory, although handicapped on account of the present difficulties owing to the war.

STROHMEYER & ARPE CO.
New York.

Spices.

Market is exceedingly active—large trading on cassias and gingers. Ocean freights have again advanced to figures hitherto unknown. These changes will add very much to the cost of goods purchased for later delivery. Great scarcity continues throughout the list and higher prices may be expected.

Pepper.—Slowly advancing, due now to higher freights. The demand is unusual and the uncertainty of the Government officials pertaining to arrivals and the passing of same is causing considerable uneasiness. The delay is costly to the importer and naturally has to be shared by the manufacturer, and ultimately by the consumer.

Cloves.—Prices continue steady. The demand is unusually good and prices are likely to remain firm.

Nutmegs.—Very scarce and in good demand. The Government has lately held up several parcels of grinding grades. The attitude of the Government officials means a great loss and delay to the trade.

Pimento (Allspice).—Steady and in fair demand. Prices unchanged during the week.

Mace.—Very scarce at present, and we are likely to see sharp advances, due more or less to lack of supplies.

Cassias.—In better demand. Supplies here are unusually small. Spot stocks have lately been greatly decreased and very much higher prices are bound to result.

Gingers.—Very much firmer, with little chance of any relief before late spring. Higher spot prices are therefore very probable.

Tapiocas.—Very firm and have advanced during the week. This article has been affected by the higher freights.

Paprika.—Keeps firm in price and the demand is steady. There has been considerable delay in arrival of lots from Spain and the market is really bare of stock at present.

Benzoate of Soda Question Up Again in Wisconsin.

Action was started in the United States District Court at Madison, Wis. during the week by Curtice Brothers Co. of New York against the State Dairy and Food Commission to restrain the enforcement of the State food law prohibiting the sale of any article containing benzoate of soda. The complaint declares that the Federal law permits the use of benzoate as a preservative and that the State law is in contravention with the Federal law.

Whenever you hear somebody argue that nationally advertised goods are not good merchandise for retailers, see if there isn't some reason why he says something which is so obviously false. Has he a brand of his own that he wants to sell you, or is he himself misled because somebody with a private brand (which nobody wants) has told him he could make a big profit on it?

A Professional Friend came through from the West on the midnight sleeper and stepped out at the M. Depot at 7 A. M. His appointment was for 9 o'clock and it was too early to call on his circle of friends, though he had many of them in M., so he went across the track to the M. Hotel.

The waiter briskly told him he could have "Beef Stew." "Ham and Eggs." "Sausages and Griddle Cakes." He ordered "Ham and Eggs" with his Coffee and Rolls. He said "That Ham was the worst I ever tasted in my life, it was tough, salty, ill-flavored, and I shall never think of that M. Hotel without a dark brown taste in my mouth."

You see that too many brisk Hotel Managers think a Ham is still a Ham, but was it good advertising for the M. Hotel to allow such stuff to be served on its table? Was it good advertising for the Market that furnished Supplies to the M. Hotel, even if they did pay a cent or two less per pound for such Ham than the Ferris would have cost them, and was it not the worst advertising in the World for any Hotel, Market or Grocer who offers Food to its Patrons and Guests to allow such stuff to be worked off on them? Does it pay anyone to handle cheap grade Hams and Bacon, and can any Grocer or Market afford to have such inferior grades worked off on them by unscrupulous Suppliers? Does it not hurt every time?

Girl Clerks in Grocery Stores.

D'ye know, I've about come to believe that girl clerks in grocery stores ain't so much.

I used to believe that they could beat men clerks all to thunder. I used to think that if I had a store I wouldn't use anything else, except for the rough heavy stuff.

But I've seen quite a lot of 'em, going around, and I believe I've changed my views about that. I don't believe now that I'd have 'em at all. Women and girls are almighty peculiar and most of 'em ain't sweet when anything ruffles 'em.

One of my customers has a girl in his store. She's cashier, and when there's a rush on she waits on some of the trade. I've seen her a lot of times. There ain't anything the matter with her except that she won't talk. Just goes about waiting on customers as glum as the very old deuce. You'd think she was mad, but she really ain't, her boss says. It's just her way. Bum way, I say.

I've seen her wait on a customer and not open her mouth at all, except to say "what else?" Don't even say "what else, please."

Good Lord, she could talk about the weather, couldn't she?

People don't like to be waited on by glum clerks. I know how I feel about it when I go in a store to buy something. When I get up against a grumpy clerk I feel like sticking a pin in her and then when she opens her mouth to yelp, handing in a good swift slap.

"Does that girl of yours ever say anything to anybody about anything?" I asked her boss.

"Not very often," he says. "But she goes about her business all right."

"Maybe she does," I said, "but a little talk don't hurt when you're selling goods."

"There is such a thing as too blamed much talk when you're selling goods," he said, looking at me in a meaning way, but I didn't take any notice. I'm above such slurs, me.

But it ain't often you find a girl clerk like that. Most of 'em are willing enough to talk, but they're snappy. Women are the easiest ruffled people on the face of the earth. One thing—a lot of 'em ain't well. They've got headaches and they've got backaches, and they've got a lot of other things that us men don't have, and all of 'em hurt their tempers.

Why I heard a girl clerk waiting on a customer out in York the other day, that honest to goodness, if she'd talked to me that way I'd have turned her up and spanked her. It wasn't so much what she said as the way she said it. Sounded like she was just on edge about something and had to let out on people. Snappy and sharp and disagreeable as all get out.

The customer was a little girl, but she noticed it all right, because when the clerk turned her back for something the little girl made the worst snoot at her I ever saw outside of a bad dream. I'll bet she told her mother about it when she went home. I don't know what the mother did, but I know what she could do. I wouldn't want her to do it to my store if I had one.

Chance is the next time I hear that girl wait on trade she'll be as fine as pie. Whatever trouble she had before will have went and left her all right. But if I find she's still snappy, then I'm going to step up and buy something and if she does it on me I'm going to lam her.

I may have to stand that kind of thing at home but I'll be blamed if I'll stand it outside.

No, sir, there ain't much to girl clerks in grocery stores. They don't go behind the counter to learn the business, anyway, like a man does. They just go in to get a job until something happens. You can't get good service from people like that. They ain't interested. What do they care if a customer gets mad and leaves? It ain't anything out of their pocket, and as they never expect to have a store of their own they don't care if they do get in wrong with people.

Of course once in a while you get hold of a peach who is good-tempered, no matter what she's doing. A girl like that will always do her best. I know one or two like that. If you can only get such girls as that for clerks, you're all right—they'll make good, better than most men. But they're as scarce as bearded ladies, that kind are. Most of 'em get married. They're soon snapped up; they don't have to work in stores.

The annual meeting of members of Retailers' Mutual Fire Insurance npany of Pennsylvania, which has hy policyholders in this ctiy among membership of the Commercial b and Erie Retail Grocers' Associa, was held Thursday at the Bourse Philadelphia, which is the corporate dquarters of the company. he company has had a successful , adding to its surplus, and by the servative underwriting has saved organized merchants who have insured in it an average of 49 per cent. in comparison with standard rates during the past thirteen years. It limits its business to fire-protected territory, and only insures members of the Retail Merchants' Association of Pennsylvania through its 100 local associations in 200 Pennsylvania cities and towns. On July 1st the company will change from its cash premium, premium note plan to what is known as the all cash plan, under which no notes are taken, the company collecting the full cash premium collected by capital stock companies, with a refund of the profits on the renewal after paying fire losses, expenses and providing for conflagrations. The organized merchants have saved over $180,000 in premiums since the company was established in 1903, after the payment of all adjusted losses to date, and is in good financial condition, with no past due obligations of any kind and with sufficient surplus on hand to enable it to pay its members their unearned premiums and pending adjustments without embarrassment. Members of the company from Pittsburgh, Easton, Scranton, Harrisburg, Erie, New Castle, Chester, Reading, New Brighton, Wyalusing and McKeesport attended the meeting.

A resolution was adopted authorizing the company to affiliate with the State and National Association of Mutual Fire Insurance Companies. A dispute having arisen between the agencies of Mt. Carmel and Harrisburg over the writing of insurance of chain stores by a non-resident agent, it was agreed that the company protect its agents in their field and no agent will be permitted to write business in any locality of which he is not a resident if the company has a resident agent at that point. Arrangements have been made by which the company will receive interest on daily deposits in its checking account, and the change to an all-cash plan by which the company collects a full tariff rate will, it is believed, materially increase its interest earnings and thereby reduce its expense ratio. The company has but one weakness. It has saved its members too much money without making adequate provision for conflagrations by setting aside part of its earnings in surplus account for extraordinary losses. Up to the present time the company has escaped all serious conflagrations, and the directors believe it is better to provide a surplus out of the savings than levy assessments.

Plenty of Apples on Hand.

An inquiry relating to the quantity of apples in cold storage January 1, 1916, by the United States Office of Markets and Rural Organization has just been completed. Inasmuch as some cold storage firms have not reported, the report is not complete and the holdings as given are not considered as the total cold storage apple holdings. The information received shows that there are 9.8 per cent. more apples in storage this year than were in storage January 1, 1915. However, the barreled apple holdings on the first of this month show an excess of 27.6 per cent. over those of a year ago, while the boxed apple holdings are 28.4 per cent. below those of last year. During the month of December the holdings were decreased 12.7 per cent., the barreled and boxed stock moving at the same rate as compared with the original holdings. The corrected report for December 1st indicates that there were 13.5 per cent. more apples in storage at that time than were in storage last season. On January 1st this year there were only 9.8 per cent. more apples in storage than on January 1st last year. This indicates, the report says, that the apples have moved out of the coolers faster this year than last.

Consumer Confidence an Asset

QUALITY is a far greater issue today than it was years ago. One dissatisfied customer is a menace to success. The successful grocer knows this and therefore endeavors, by fair dealing and selling quality goods, to cultivate a spirit of confidence in every one of his customers.

National Biscuit Company goods enjoy the full confidence of American housewives. You can make this confidence one of your assets by keeping N. B. C. products well to the fore. Display them in your windows, on your counters and shelves—and their influence upon your sales will be well marked.

No. 347.—The Remedy Against Employees Who Steal Private Data of the Firm.

Here is still another phase of protecting one's self, or failing to protect one's self, against dishonest employees who by reason of their positions, learn all one's business secrets and then go into business for themselves and use them. The letter of which the following is an extract comes from Baltimore, Md.:

> We do a wholesale business here, both by employing salesmen and by mail. We have endeavored to increase our mail order business for the last three years and have been very successful. We have a special list of mail order customers who are never called upon by our salesmen. This list has been built up during the last six years, and it has taken a lot of work, time and money. We have a card index system of the mail order people, numbering several hundred, and it includes all the information we have been able to secure about the buyers. This list is a very valuable one and we could not do business without it.
> In addition to this list we also have another list of our regular customers. These are the customers who buy through salesmen. This is treated much like the other, meaning that it is a card index, with notes giving data about the different customers, their financial ability and anything else we could pick up. This is also very valuable.
> Up to the first of this year we had in our employ a man who was a sort of jack of all trades. He would go out on some salesmen's route, when it was necessary, and he would act as store salesman, and also do work around the office. He recently married a girl of means, we understand, and is going into the same line of business for himself. We have accidentally discovered since he left our employ that he made a complete copy of both our card index systems before he left and evidently intends to use these names in his own business. We have taxed him with this, but he denies it. What is our legal remedy, or have we one?

As a general principle, no employee has a right, after he leaves the service of an employer, to employ against that employer the secrets obtained by reason of his former employment. Nothing is more firmly settled in the law than that, and yet in the very nature of things, the application of it is subject to sharp limitations. Take this employee referred to in the above correspondence. Of course he came to know, and he could not help it, that John Smith, of Washington, D. C., was a man who bought goods by mail and that at certain seasons he would want certain things. He carries information like that away in his mind, and nothing can prevent him from using it afterward in his own business, or for another employer. If his employer has not tied him up with a contract not to solicit the customers of the house when he takes a new job, he can go out and solicit John Smith, and use all the special information that he has obtained about John Smith, but not in any fraudulent way.

Bear in mind that this can always be prevented by making the employee sign a contract to let old customers alone for a certain period. But often that is not done.

So far the former employee can use his knowledge of the secrets of his former employer's business without interference, but copying private lists and taking them away with him is another proposition. Any court would instantly grant an injunction against him, forbidding him from using such matter. He could not possibly have any defense for doing such a thing except that the employer consented.

In several cases this difficulty has been encountered: the court granted the injunction and the former employee gave back the lists, but naturally retained in his mind some of the data from them, which he continued to use. Stopping him then was almost impossible, because he had a perfect right to solicit the business of the people on that list, and it was very difficult to fasten upon him any illegal use of information gained in his former employer's service.

There is but one way to get around this, and that is to make the employee execute a contract, in the beginning, to stay away from the old customers for six months or a year. But even if there was such a contract, and the employee lived fully up to it, he could still be restrained from using secret lists, or anything of that sort, afterward. In the absence of such a contract the employee is as free as air to do anything he can, short of fraud, to sell the firm's old customers himself. The house that does not realize this sufficiently to get the contracts I have described out of its employees, is living over a volcano every minute of the time.

Question: B. B. Crompton, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.—Will you kindly inform me as to the legality of telling a customer who owes you a bill, that if he does not take steps to pay, you will place the account in the hands of his employer for collection. Would such a statement in the eyes of the law be considered a threat and thereby be illegal? If it is permissible, is there any particular form you would advise in presenting it to his employer?

2.—Also, will you kindly advise me if it is legal to advertise an account for sale, and if so, if it is necessary first to place it under judgment, or may simply a book account be advertised?

Answer.—If there is anything illegal in telling a debtor's employer that the debtor owes money, it is because it is slander if spoken and libel if written. We may not tell it about that a debtor owes us money, because the law says that it is defamation of character amounting to slander. It is not slander in Pennsylvania, however, to tell a debtor's employer that the debtor owes you money, if it is true, because in Pennsylvania slander is always a civil action, not a criminal, and the truth would be a good defense. You can legally threaten to tell a debtor's employer that he owes you money, and actually tell him if you have to. I advise seeing the employer whenever possible and talking it over verbally, rather than writing letters.

2.—It is legal to advertise an account for sale, but it is much safer to get judgment on it first. The reason is that when a judgment is obtained the time for the debtor to dispute the account is past. It is never past while it still remains an account, and if you advertise a owing to you a claim as to which the debtor has a really bona fide dispute, even though he has been tardy in coming forward with it, you will be in a bad mess, for you will have been guilty of libel.

They'll All Thank You

¶ Sell Chase-O and every woman who gets it will thank you after her first wash day. Chase-O is a laundry crystal that practically does the wash itself. Merely boil the clothes with soap and Chase-O, and the work is done. If you don't believe this, try it first yourself.

¶ Retails at 5 cents and never stops selling after it begins.

Fresh Sausage, Scrapple, Souse, Liver Pudding

Burk's Fresh Sausage

Composed entirely of selected tender pieces of pork, not the ordinary trimmings commonly used. Not cheapened in price and quality by the addition of tripe, boiled rice and sundry substitutes. Correctly seasoned, not offensive to sensitive stomachs because of pungent herbs. Nutritious. In four styles — hashed fine and coarse, linked and in straight casings.

Burk's Philadelphia Scrapple

Prepared from the very best materials—good, wholesome meats and extra fine corn meal. Well boiled and seasoned to suit the most critical. Not to be compared with some cheap products of doubtful hues and colors. Burk's eats as good as it looks. Superior to farmers' products. In pans of 15 pounds each.

Burk's Pig Souse

is a seasonable specialty prepared fresh daily, in pans of five pounds each. The jelly is clear and transparent and free from vegetable gelatines and ill-smelling glue stock. Contains plenty of meat and garnished with slices of lemon and parsley.

Proves attractive when turned out of the pan, and is a quick seller, saving the consumer the trouble of cooking pig's feet, so difficult to obtain at this season of the year.

Burk's Liver Pudding

Of the usual "Burk" standard—clean and unadulterated. Rich in quality and an excellent dish when fried, or, after removing the casing, hashed with potatoes. In rings of 1 pound each.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

"Get a Shave—Before you return to work," was the peremptory order given a clerk the other day. With safety's selling from 25 cents up, shouldn't a man feel ashamed to appear in a public store serving the most dainty foods with a three days' growth?

Set your alarm at shaving hour. Ten minutes will do it. Five ought to do it. You will get so that if you miss a morning you will feel only half dressed till lunch time. The nice thing about keeping clean is that it costs nothing. Now, when you get that shave, look down at your shoes and see if the face hasn't got something on the leather. A 10-cent box of 2-in-1 will last a month with hard labor. It isn't the saving we have in mind. It's the morning shine.

Selling Mackerel.—If you have the space and the proper background, show your mackerel up in the original barrel. Experience proves this to be the most effective display. But it isn't every store can place barrels so as not to jar on the surrounding goods or, indeed, on the store's general appearance.

Stone crocks are good—all even size, of course, representing about five sizes. Use a galvanized wire fork, but a nickel plated one is better. Turn your fish around so you can dwell on the meaty part, which, of course, is free from rust, but the back is the more attractive looking, especially when forked out of the clear brine.

Never handle mackerel with the bare fingers unless you are strictly confined to the fish department.

Push the No. 1s. This is the size that will give the best satisfaction and will make men friends of your store.

Know Cheese.—Because to know cheese puts you where you can confidently give your opinion on quality when stock arrives.

Men are the cheese eaters, just as they are the mackerel eaters. Both seem to be a man's dish. While good cheese is now bringing a big price, that is no reason why you shouldn't have the best, and you will have the best so long as you can show the buyer that you can sell it.

Nothing encourages a buyer more than to see clerks take a special interest in the goods he lands at the store, especially that class of goods which needs effort and tact and knowledge to sell.

Never be without your snappy cheese. Insist on having it. Sometimes it's at a premium; but premium or no premium—have it.

If You Were Country Bred—You know what pot cheese is. Ask the boss to write to your nearest creamery for a price on an 80-pound can. If you fail to get it write me. It's a dandy seller at 10 cents a pound, but it must be shown up in a large white, deep dish.

It's one of the many articles that is too "uncertain" for the Economy Stores to handle, so you needn't worry about deep cut competition.

Sugar Business Not a Public Utility.

The United States District Court at New Orleans has decided against the constitutionality of the recent statute of the State of Louisiana declaring the business of sugar refining to be a public utility and requiring the American Sugar Refining Co. to pay in Louisiana as high a price for sugar as it pays at any other point in the United States, the law not applying to other refiners, planters and buyers of sugar. The American Sugar Refining Co. instituted injunction proceedings against Louisisiana in the Federal courts. The decision was unanimous.

THE VALUE OF BRIGHT STORES

¶ The difficulty of making a sale—whether it be dry goods or vegetables, jewelry or shoes is increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Other things being equal, the Electrically lighted shop will do more business than the store which uses other illuminants. "Indoor Daylight" can only be obtained by the use of Mazda Electric lamps.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure

ROYAL BAKING POWDER is the most widespread selling brand of any baking powder in the world. This proves that it is liked by the greatest number of people, and is one good reason for you to push its sale.

Fully Guaranteed

Another good reason is that ROYAL BAKING POWDER never becomes dead stock. It is constantly in demand, and year in and year out pays more and surer profit than any other baking powder you can sell.

Every grocer will find it to his advantage to keep a full stock of Royal Baking Powder always on hand.

Facsimile of stamp of Philadelphia Association of Manufacturers' Representatives

See What the Stamp Did for This Man

One important retailer in Eastern Pennsylvania said last week that for five years before the specialty stamps were adopted he never signed a specialty order at all.

"I never felt quite sure what was going to become of it," he said, or "when the goods would be delivered, for jobbers didn't like them. Therefore I didn't sign any."

He signs specialty orders now, but only those with the specialty stamp on.

"I feel safe with the stamp," he said, "and the jobber will treat it like any other order when it has the stamp on."

There must be something in the specialty stamp when it can change a man's habits like that.

From time to time I have discussed the mimeograph for retailers' advertising. Most readers hereof know that a mimeograph is a duplicating machine. With it you can have a thing written once on a typewriter and the mimeograph will make as many copies of it as you want. It is a sort of simplified printing press, and very handy. The advantage of the thing to the average retailer is the economy—you are entirely independent of printers; and the fact that the advertising it produces has much more personal a look than printed advertising.

The Kuhn Co., of Wilkinsburg, Pa., send me a copy of an advertisement which they recently used, and which was printed on a mimeograph. It was the size of a large letterhead and I am reproducing it here:—

October, 20, 1915.

WOODBURY'S FACIAL SOAP
Among the new goods arriving this week is a shipment of Jergen's Soap
Cut prices will prevail on the following varieties until further notice;
Woodbury's Facial Soap the cake 21 cents 3 for 60 cents
Geronian Bath Soap " " 9 " 3 " 25 "
Pumiss Hand Soap (large) " " 9 " 3 " 25 "

MAPLE SYRUP
Buttle & Harmon's Pure Maple Syrup complies with all State and Federal pure food laws. That is sufficient evidence of its purity, and if you will take our word, we would say that it is a very smooth, delicately flavored syrup and that it is very easy to take.
Pint bottle 27 cents, Quart tin 45 cents, Half gallon tin 85 cents.

COMB HONEY
A new lot of Grigg's Comb Honey has just arrived. The Government does not permit the use of the word "Clover" any more. It is asserted that the Bee might dally along the way and get some honey from the Rose or something. Of course anyone who knows about a "Bee Line" would repudiate such a thought. However Griggs's Bees are all instructed to only take honey from White Clover, and if you will buy a comb of this fine honey, you will see that it is made by very particular, clean and industrious Bees who do not stop until they have entirely filled the comb. Packed in cartons.
Comb Honey 25 cents, also in glass, 10, 15, 25, 45 and 75 cents.

CITRON
Torelli Citron comes from Italy and for quality it is in a class all by its self. The new crop is the finest we ever saw. Price no higher than last year. The pound 25 cents.

HOSTETTER'S DRIED CORN
To say that we have it is enough for those who know what it is; for the benefit of those who have not tried it, Hostetter's dried corn is made in Lancaster County from tender young sweet corn. It is an entirel different article from old fashioned dried corn. Less expensive than canned corn and tastes more like fresh.
Hostetter's Dried Corn the pound 22 cents, 5 pounds $ 1.00

BRUSHES
We would like to have you look over a new line of brushes the next time you are in the store. The lot includes Clothes brushes, Nail, Sink, Shoe, and Scrubs. Also Whisk Brooms of the finest quality.
A specially good Nail Brush each 10 cents.

CIDER CIDER
Our Sweet cider will be in this week. The cider mill man says that [illegible] it is very good this year.
One quart 13 cents, Half gallon 23 cents, Gallon 40 cents.

SEASIDE BUTTER CRACKS
A tasty crisp butter cracker packed in two pound tins. A good [illegible] for children. Special Saturday, the tin 28 cents.

I think this is capital advertising. I should consider it almost certain to be heard from. Of course everybody knows that it isn't a personal typewritten letter, but it nevertheless has so much the look of it that the appeal is more direct than with printed advertising—very much more direct. I have always contended that the ideal advertisement, if the expense and work didn't make it impracticable, would be a typewritten letter, personally addressed to everybody you wanted to reach. Of course for many reasons that is out of the question, but here is something that is right next door to it—and costs less, I presume, than ordinary printed advertising.

In order to give the readers hereof some information, in this connection with the subject of mimeograph advertising, I have obtained some data about it. The flat-bed mimeograph is the simplest form of the mimeograph and can be bought new as low as $15.

This duplicator consists of a wooden frame in which the operator fastens the stencil copy. The frame is hinged to a wooden base covered with a blotter. The sheets to receive impressions are placed on the base, the upper frame containing the copy is brought down upon the base, and an inked roller is passed across the face of the stencil. Insert another blank sheet, etc. The outfit includes also ink, a dozen or so stencil sheets, a slate used in connection with inking the roller. The entire mimeograph comes in a box about 15 inches by 12, and 6 inches deep.

The copy may be prepared on a typewriter, using a stencil, of course, or a stylus can be used to trace the copy by hand.

An improved mimeograph is the rotary machine, which does much more rapid work a little better. This costs around $30.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be taken up in strict rotation.

Fine Dry Goods Business Reported.

Wholesale distribution of dry goods for the week shows a very large increase over the same period of a year ago.

Merchants are coming to market earlier than usual, reporting satisfactory holiday business, with their stocks well sold up.

Prices on practically all lines of dry goods are exceedingly firm.

Bill Aimed at Private Brand Again Appears.

Measure Introduced in House o Representatives Requiring Manu facturer's Name to Appear o Label. Would Chiefly Affect Pr vate Brands, Packed to Order fo Those Using Them.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchan and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
January 20, 1916.

The old bill requiring the prin ing of the manufacturer's name o every package goods label has mad its appearance in Congress agai It is H. R. Bill 3097. It provide that the label upon each package o food shall state the name and ad dress of the manufacturer, pro ducer, canner or packer, and that may also bear the name of the di tributor.

A similar bill was introduced the last session, aroused heate comment, and finally died.

The present food law regulat statements as to character a quantity of contents but does n require that the label shall state t first source of the product. So lo as the distributor's name appea upon the label, he is primarily r sponsible for any fraudulent m representation of the article and subject to prosecution.

It is understood that the bill w be violently opposed, chiefly by c cerns using private brands, not tually manufactured or packed themselves.

In a Sanitary Package

The sanitary, dust-proof package has revolutionized food manufacture. The up-to-date grocer welcomes packaged foods because they are easy to handle, the turn-over is quick and the profit is certain.

Shredded Wheat

goes to the consumer in a sanitary package, and it goes to the grocer in a wooden case. It is the only breakfast cereal packed in odorless spruce wood cases, insuring cleanliness and purity. The case may be easily sold for 10 cents or 15 cents, thus adding to the grocer's profits.

This Man Wants to Change to Cash—What Would You Do?

He Has to Meet an Economy Store and Thinks He Can Do It Better by Selling for Cash. The Whole Subject Discussed, With Experiences of a Grocer Who Tried It and Went Back and Another Who Has a Plan of Selling Both Ways.

The following letter from a New England subscriber is on the always interesting subject of changing from credit to cash:—

Waterbury, Conn., Jan. 19, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I would like to have your opinion on a change from credit to cash basis, as I am considering making a change. I run a meat market and grocery and I am about to change my location from the main street where there are no intersecting streets to a junction on the same street, only about a block away. The more money the people have the more they seem to go to the cash stores. People are earning more in this city than at any time I know of during my 10 years in business. There is an Economy Store on our street where they mark goods very low, and lots of my customers go there when they have the money and come to me when they are short, so I consider it's time for me to catch up with the times.

Trusting you will give me your opinion through your valuable journal at your earliest convenience. Please don't publish my name.

Yours truly,
W.

Reams might be written about cash as against credit. It is a highly debatable question. Some retailers would not be willing to do a cash business, while others would not be willing to do anything else. Our own opinion is that whether a grocer should do a cash or a credit business depends first on the character of business he wishes to do; and second on the character of people he intends to sell. There is no rule equally applicable to all. We believe that it is not practicable to do a strictly cash business in the highest grade goods with the highest grade people.

The pros and cons of the cash business can be summed up as follows:—

ARGUMENTS FOR CASH.

1—You always have your money and always know where you are.

2—Selling for cash, you can buy for cash, which is advantageous in several ways.

3—Selling and buying for cash enables you to sell cheaper than could be done on a credit basis, the advantages of which are also obvious.

ARGUMENTS FOR CREDIT.

1—You can hold your people better. Cash buyers shop around a great deal more than credit buyers.

2—You can usually sell to a better class of people, who ordinarily will not pay cash no matter what the advantages.

3—You can sell more goods to the same people. People always buy more on credit than they do for cash.

4—You can get better prices.

5—If you select your customers from those you know are financially responsible, your money is as safe as if you had it in your hand.

If the need is to compete with an Economy store, there are two ways to go at it:—

1—Follow the Economy store by selling for cash, cutting prices and going after the same people they go after.

2—Sell a class of goods that the Economy store doesn't handle and go after a class of people who will not buy for cash at an Economy store.

We believe that in the majority of cases the second way will work the best, for in a sense it goes around the fight instead of going into it. It puts the store in a different class than the Economy store, and as much as can be done, frees it from the Economy store's competition. Are there enough people who will not buy from an Economy store, to make a trade? Without doubt there are in the average community.

The vice of the first method of competing with the Economy store is that after you have cut your prices, and put yourself on a cash basis, it is probable that even then the Economy store will be able to beat you, particularly if it is one of a chain-store concern which buys direct from the manufacturer. So that you may spend all your ammunition and still win nothing.

We have read hundreds of experiences by men who changed from credit to cash. Some have been favorable, others unfavorable. More of them have been favorable than unfavorable. We present here the experience of a retailer who tried cash, and who quit it in disgust after a few months:—

> We issued a lot of handbills, which we hired boys to distribute throughout our section of the town. We covered a region of perhaps eight or ten blocks square. These circulars were printed in red and black and announced our reason for making the change from credit to cash. They also quoted a lot of prices.
> Things started off with a rush. We did $250 worth of business the first day on the cash basis. It continued almost as good the second. Then it began to gradually slip away as the novelty wore off. We watched the prices of our competitor down the street and would meet or beat every price he was offering.
> Every two weeks we got out a printed list of our prices, which we distributed in our section of the town.
> We had a nice list of credit customers when we started in, but they gradually faded away. We couldn't hold their trade. Of course, we got some of them, but most of them were accustomed to buying on time and they went to the stores where they could continue to buy on time. The cash trade which came in was new business, and it was a very fluctuating business. Some days we would do $300; other days it would drop down to $50. This made it difficult to buy for our store intelligently. We could not anticipate our wants very accurately, as we do when selling to a regular list of credit customers.
> Things went along about this way month after month. We tried various ways to increase the volume of our business. We advertised in the daily newspapers, as the chain store competitor of ours was doing. It was very expensive and did not pay. Our most profitable kind of advertising was handbills and circulars, and these we issued every two weeks, as I have stated. We could trace immediate and definite results to our handbills; we could never tell that the daily paper ads. brought us anything.
> Our efforts to secure a material increase in our business were unsuccessful. We were, of course, able to cut down our expenses somewhat, but we had to cut down our profits still more. At the end of six months the partner whom I had taken in had had enough, so had I. He sold his interest in the store and quit, and I put it back on a credit basis.
> I am now working at rebuilding my credit business, but I have learned some things about merchandising by my experience with cash.

This retailer said his experience with the cash business taught him some things about the credit business.

1—Constantly watch credits and ask for references on all new customers. Look the references up before opening the account.

2—The expense of the average credit business is too large, meaning as to clerks and delivery.

3—It is questionable whether a strictly neighborhood store can do a cash business.

4—The credit store has a big advantage in emphasizing service which the Economy store cannot do nearly so well.

5—The actual saving which the customer makes by buying for cash is really very small.

He concludes his experience thus:—

> I am doing a more satisfactory business now than ever before in my history, and I expect gradually to get back my old list of patrons. I am not doing newspaper or handbill advertising, but am soliciting my old customers to come back by personal interviews. One by one they are coming. Some of them are probably gone for good, but I expect to get most of the ones I want. And when I get them they will stay.

Mr. J. W. Newberry, the well known California grocer, has recently devised a new plan of doing a credit business. He calls it "solution of the present credit problem," and describes it as follows:—

> It has been pretty well established in a retail trade that there is a certain percentage between a cash over the counter price and a credit and service price, and that difference has been variously estimated at 10, 12 and 15 per cent., and in using the lowest percentage as a starting point, we ventured to put our credit department on that preferential basis. That is to say, on January 1, 1916, we issued a circular which enabled us to quote net cash over the counter price (which prices would successfully compete with any mail order house, any department store, or so-called cut-rate grocery store), together with a plan which was sufficiently elastic to accommodate any credit customers in our city who wanted credit and service and was willing to pay the regular price for it.
> We first marked all our goods at a price based on net cash over the counter sale, and then just put in operation the old credit system upside down, which was our net price, with a stipulation that 10 per cent. would be added at the end of the month to all credit accounts and where ordered in quantities as designated in our delivery zone system governed by distance from the store. This is nothing new, it's just changing the system of having people who really want credit and service have their bill for same thoroughly itemized and have it so itemized as to show what they are really paying for credit.
> If the majority of people knew they were paying 10 per cent. per month for the credit and petty ordering on their living wants, they would do but a short time that which under the old system they have been doing for years with no advantage to the dealer and a loss to themselves.
> This upside down credit system relieves the credit man of a thousand excuses and explanations, for if a man must have credit, he knows the conditions and that it will cost him 10 per cent. per month and he will proceed with caution at least, and will try to know how he is coming out, in other words, he would, or should, think.
> If the mail order houses or department stores, or the so-called cut-rate houses, get our business, it's our fault and is because we do not know how to meet their conditional prices. They sell for cash-over-the-counter-prices. Let us do the same and when we do extend credit and service, get the additional cost. So you can see that this old credit business just upside down does the business, and if we will just be honest with ourselves and our trade, they will see the justice of our contention. Is this not a key that will fit the present condition? What we want is the grocery business put on a sane basis, and when this is done then we can and will reduce the distance between the purchaser and consumer fully 20 per cent. of the present cost. It will take the co-operation of all the factors, the producer, consumer and the middlemen, and get our buying down to a cash basis, and we believe that a 10 per cent. a month presentation will be a notable factor and will do the work of clearing the situation of the annoyances of the present credit and service system.

Summing the whole thing up, we believe that we would change to a cash basis, in order to compete with an Economy store, only if we were sure we could stand the pace of the Economy store afterward, and only if there were not enough people available—the kind who would not patronize an Economy store—to make a credit trade for our store.

ell-Known Coffee House Thinks Stevens Bill Should Pass

gues That It Would Hurt Merely the Predatory Price-Cutter, and Would Help Everybody Else. Thinks Manufacturers Could be Depended on Not to Treat Merchants Unfairly.

We note that you are publishing tter in opposition to the "Stev-s-Ayres Standard Price Bill."

We will frankly say that, in our inion, this is a mistake, as we lerstand that the purposes of this islation are solely intended to de-ve dishonest advertisers who do possess, or are not content to y on their own good will and utation, as the power to use ndard articles of established ights and staple value which the sumer calls for by name as bait lure and deceive the public and injure and destroy smaller com-itors.

As we understand it, the Stevens-res bill is not intended for use marketing bulk or unbranded or dentified merchandise of any de-iption. The evil of predatory ce-cutting—the form of unfair npetition which the bill is de-ned to cure—is impossible on mmodities with the source and lity of which the consumer is familiar. No impression of gen-l cheapness of stock can be made cutting prices on such goods—ther is the Stevens-Ayres bill in-ded, nor would it be practical for purpose of marketing goods of ckly changing fashion or season-e value. The intelligence of re-ers as well as manufacturers ld prevent such use of the bill ess the contract between manu-urer and distributor provided for disposal sale uniform throughout the trade, under special schedules of prices filed in the same manner as the original and to be effective at stated times.

We believe that the Stevens-Ayres bill will inaugurate the square deal in merchandising to the mutual benefit of manufacturer, distributor and consumer. The cause deserves the support of all who believe in the competitive principle and who also believe that the great national and public interest is best served by competition in excellence of quality, rather than in price inducement.

A copy of this paper's reply to the above is as follows:—

We have published some criticisms of the Stevens Bill, but they were nowhere near as numerous as the arguments we have published in its favor. In fact, for several months we have carried each week an argument by some factor in the discussion in favor of the passage of the Stevens Bill.

The purpose has simply been to hold an impartial discussion of the measure, both pro and con, and in the course of the discussion we have not hesitated to point out such defects as we considered the bill contained. With the general purpose of the bill we have always been in sympathy, but we believe it should be amended in ways we have called attention to, and as a matter of fact, it has already been amended along some of those lines in the revised bill which was introduced last week.

Trial by Jury for Baking Powder

A good way to convince yourself on the baking powder question is to give a sample of the leading brands, Rumford among them, to some good cook—your wife, say—and tell her to try them and say which is the best.

Trial by jury as applied to baking powder—we're willing to submit Rumford to it any time.

If you try this, you might say to your "jury" that there is nothing in Rumford but the nutritious phosphates, starch and soda, all of which add to the wholesomeness of the food.

Rumford Baking Powder has always been profitable merchandise to the grocer.

WITH THE EDITOR

I note with interest that the big coffee people are about to launch a campaign in the interest of coffee. The aim of course is to increase the consumption, and some elaborate plans are in the making for this purpose. One of them is to present to consumers some data about the food value and the proper preparation of coffee—any arguments, in fact, which will induce consumers to use more coffee than they use now.

The Coffee Campaign and Retailers.

All of which is good. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" is in favor of the plan and will aid it all it can, without regard to whether it gets any advertising out of it or not.

But I have a word to say right now, and I have said it before in discussing similar enterprises—the success of the plan depends first on the intelligent co-operation of the retailer, and second, on the advertising and exploitation done. As a factor the advertising comes second, not first. The retailer should be taken into the plan from the beginning and shown how to co-operate with it.

The advertising to consumers may be depended upon to do good in three ways:—

1—It will induce some persons who have hitherto had a prejudice against coffee to use it. The grocer to whom they go to buy coffee, by his handling of their case and his advice as to what to buy, can put them in the regular coffee drinking class, or can put them back where they were before the advertising convinced them.

2—It will induce some present coffee users to use coffee more freely. Again, the grocer can help or hinder by watching this tendency and cultivating it, or by ignoring it and letting it die.

3—It will induce some persons to use a better coffee than they have been using. This would be a good thing for everybody. Intelligent leading and selection by the retailer at this point will harvest this, or the lack of it will allow the seed to die unwatered in the ground.

This campaign cannot have its full measure of success unless the retailer helps in it, and the retailer, who is pretty busy holding his end up, will not give it the attention that he could unless a systematic plan is adopted of getting him in the plan and keeping him in it.

The Stevens bill, which aims to give manufacturers the right to fix the retail prices of trade-marked goods, has been amended, and in a way which shows the American Fair Trade League to be insincere. It has all along contended that one of the best things the Stevens bill did was to prevent discounts for quantity. The buyer buying 100 cases would have to pay the same price as the buyer of one case and this, said Secretary Whittier, of the League, was in the protection of the small merchant. Because I criticised certain portions of the bill, Mr. Whittier has accused me of working in the interest of department stores and large retailers, who are the people wanting quantity prices. It tickled him to say that and didn't hurt me, so I have paid no attention to it.

Cheap.

The Stevens bill has now been amended, with the consent of the American Fair Trade League, so as to permit discounts for quantity. What about that, Mr. Whittier? Who is working now in the interest of department stores and large retailers?

This change of front strikes me as a bit cheap. Doesn't it show that the manufacturers who compose the American Fair Trade League really care for nobody in this thing except themselves, and that in order to quiet opposition and get through the provisions that help them, they will readily sacrifice the very provision which they have been loudly crying was in the interest of the small retailer?

The New York wholesale grocers are sitting up just now and taking a great deal of notice of the chain stores, which continue to multiply over there like the green bay tree. In an address before the recent convention of the New York Wholesale Grocers' Association the secretary, Nelson Gray, spoke as follows on this subject:—

Jobbers and the Chain Stores.

> The rapid growth of the chain store and buying exchanges, especially in the metropolitan districts, should have your prompt attention and careful consideration. It is folly to think that these new factors in the food trade are only temporary and will fall of their own weight. The chain store is a legal as well as a business proposition, and, under the management of competent business men, has proven not only practical, but profitable, and has the indorsement of a majority of the manufacturers.
> The question that confronts the wholesale grocer is, not how to prevent the chain store, but how to adapt his own and his retail customers' business to meet the conditions these new factors in the distribution of the food products are causing. While the chain store diverts a great volume of business that should go through the wholesale grocer, their owners invest their money in them, expecting adequate returns for the investment.
> The buying exchange, incorporated or otherwise, is a different proposition. In the buying exchange the retailer invests a small sum, not with the expectation of getting his returns from this investment, but expecting to get the jobbing profit on all the goods he may buy during the year. As the buying exchange cannot exist without the consent of the manufacturers it is up to them to say how long this class of trade shall be allowed to compete with the legitimate jobber.

Can the jobbers do anythi effective against the chain store Not directly, that seems clear. Mr. Gray states, chain stores a legitimate and as long as peop want to invest money and brains them they will go on. If the jo bers could induce all or most the manufacturers to refuse to s to the chain stores direct, it wou hamper the latter a good deal, b they could never do that. First b cause the businesss is big and t manufacturers want it, and secon because they are afraid of t monopoly laws. Almost none the manufacturers refuse to-day, could be persuaded to refuse, to s chain stores direct.

Why don't the jobbers meet cha stores by helping their custome meet them? If a jobber could g into a town where some little groce was struggling to meet an Econom store, and show him how to do better—that would be constructi work that would tell.

In the last paragraph of M Gray's remarks, there is an implie threat against manufacturers wh sell retailers' co-operative buyin exchanges. The threat is empty Manufacturers will not refuse t sell these organizations to-day, fo the same reasons that control the as to selling chain stores.

Worth Reading and Remembering

Teach your clerks to be careful of appearances. Clean faces, clean hands, and finger nails. Well-kept hair. Clean linen and shoes are more important than good clothes.

Talk to your clerks about manners. Teach them the value of politeness. Impress on them that courteous, polite clerks attract trade.

Show your clerks how to wait on customers. Tell them how customers are lost by inattention. Accommodating clerks mean much to the success of any business.

"Like the Last" When There Is No Last

¶ When you order Java Coffee of your jobber, you probably say "send like the last." Often the jobber hasn't any like the last. The last is gone. He has matched it the best he could, but having neither the best buying facilities, nor any keen realization of the value of absolute uniformity, his match is not perfect.

¶ The chance is that you change your grades every time you buy. Is that good for your Coffee Department?

¶ The difference between buying that way and buying Harisco Standarized Coffees is that with the latter "like the last" will mean like the last—absolutely like the last. Harisco Standardized Coffees are kept uniform to the last degree.

¶ The failure to consider this point may be what's ailing your Coffee Department.

Why a Manufacturer Should Be Permitted to Fix the Retail Price of His Product

Views of Various Believers in This Doctrine Who Offer Them as Arguments for the Pending Stevens Bill.

[The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has obtained and will from time to time present a series of statements by various well-known persons who believe that the manufacturer should have the right to tell the retailer what price he must get for the manufacturer's product. All of the views which will be presented can be taken as arguments for the pending Stevens Bill, which seeks to give a manufacturer that right.—Ed.]

No. 12.—By J. D. Luckenbill, 3868 Folsom Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

Take our best advertisers to-day; they advertise their article like those which have been referred to heretofore. They will spend thousands and thousands of dollars advertising their product, and they want to put up the very best article that can possibly be put on the market for the price. They sell those goods to the retailer with the understanding that he is to get that price off the consumer. The consumer is willing to pay the price. He wants to get his money's worth, and is willing to pay for it, as a rule, in the large majority of cases. But some of these cut-throat concerns will come into the neighborhood; they will get hold of a few of those articles; they will advertise them at a ridiculously low price; they have killed the reputation of that product in that neighborhood for years to come.

The man who has spent his lifetime in building up a good product and has advertised it and has educated the consumer to use it and to understand that it is a good article, this consumer, by seeing this article sold at a ridiculously low price, lower than a legitimate retailer can buy, gets the impression that the retailer has been robbing him or that the article is not what it used to be. In consequence, the legitimate retailer has, in order to protect himself, got to quit handling that article if the cut prices continue. The consequence is that everybody loses—the manufacturers, the newspaper man, the retailer: everybody clear down to the consumer.

This bill helps the retailer and the consumer in regard to damaged goods. Take cereals. If we have a line of cereals on our shelves which have become damaged, we have authority under this bill to demand of the manufacturer that he take those goods off our shelves at the price we paid for them. If he refuses, then we have the right to sell those goods at any price we can get if we notify the manufacturer that they are damaged. But we can do that in the open business. On the other hand, if we want to close up our business or sell out, then we can transfer the goods the same as we do now from the dealer to the purchaser at any price we see fit. It protects the retailer. It stands to reason, in the ordinary channels of business that any manufacturer who has spent years and years and lots of money in advertising his product, would be glad of the opportunity of taking back the goods at the price the merchant paid for them rather than see those goods slaughtered on the open market and kill his reputation. There are very few manufacturers but will exchange their goods to keep the quality up. It is the idea of the legitimate manufacturer to protect the public and to protect himself and the retailer and make his business a permanent business, and in order to accomplish that it is his policy to be on the square and give everybody a square deal, and when he does not do that his business begins to go back.

The purpose of the bill is to prevent fire sales and cut prices. For instance, if I get a lot of cereals on hand and those cereal packages become dirty, or the goods stale, naturally I would want to get rid of them. You know in one neighborhood, even in a city—take for instance our own town on the south side—Kellogg's goods are practically the only corn product that is a seller. Up on the north side they sell Egg-o-See. If I get Egg-o-See down on my side of town I have a hard time selling it. If the weather is damp, those goods are not fresh after you have had them on hand five or six months. They are not fit to sell; not fit to be used and should be returned; and in order to keep the retailer from selling those goods out, that really are not fit for food, at 5 cents a package, or at any price, to get rid of them, he would return them to the manufacturer and get his money back.

Dairy Department Says Butter is Often Much Less Clean Than Oleo.

Issues Bulletin on the Oleo-Butter Conflict Which is Considered Strong Blow for Former.

Touching the old conflict between oleo and butter, the Agricultural and Industries Department of the State of Alabama has just issued a special bulletin on butter which has made the trade all over the country sit up and take notice. According to the bulletin, butter, generally speaking, is nowhere near as clean a product as oleo.

We have obtained a copy of the bulletin and present the following conclusions from it:—

1. That Federal and State laws imposing burdensome restrictions on oleomargarine should be repealed so that, (a) those who need and desire this cheap, wholesome food may have it, in forms that please the eye and taste, and (b) the peanut and cottonseed producers may have the enlarged markets for their nutritious and sanitary products to which fair dealing entitles them.

2. That Congress should enact a law subjecting interstate commerce butter to some adequate inspection and supervision for the protection (a) of the consumer against disease spreading food, and (b) of our well-inspected and humane local dairymen against the unfair competition of the greedy, uninspected interstate dairymen.

3. Butter and oleomargarine are now both being put into neat cartons by the manufacturers. If both were put up under the supervision of the Government and sealed with a Government stamp, which it should be unlawful for anyone to break except the consumer, extensive substitution of the one for the other would be impracticable, so disease and fraud would both be materially lessened.

4. In view of the nutritious and wholesome qualities of peanut and cottonseed oil in the various forms of human food to which they are adapted, and in view of the adaptability of our soil and climate to the cheap production in large quantities of these forms of food, the masses of our people should lay aside the prejudices which have hitherto restricted them, and should increase their daily use of these highly desirable foods, thus promoting their own health and enlarging the market for these Southern products.

The reason the Alabama Dep ment has gotten into the con versy is explained in the bulleti follows:—

Under the law no substance c be received into, nor can the fi ished produce be turned out of t oleomargarine factory, until mark "inspected and passed" by a Go ernment inspector. But the powe ful Dairy Trust of the Middle We has been able to secure much r strictive legislation by both Feder and State Governments against t manufacture and distribution oleomargarine; and they have no published a bill which they propo to introduce into the next Congre for the purpose of still further r stricting the manufacture and u of this food product.

From high authority this Burea is advised that, if this proposed b should be passed, peanut and co tonseed oil would both be pract cally excluded from use in t manufacture of oleomargarine.

A peculiar page advertisement apared in the "Journal of Commerce" Wednesday last. It was apparently advertisement of Guatemala and also of its President. In the course of the ad. Guatemala coffee was exploited, claim being made that Guatemalan coffee is really the highest priced coffee in existence and that the United States consumers know nothing about it because here we use blended coffee largely and the Guatemala bean is simply used in connection with that.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea steady, without change. India-Ceylons in good demand at full prices. —Coffee fairly steady, but Rio and Santos not more than that. Demand only fair. Milds quiet and steady. Javas firm. Mocha unchanged.—Sugar quiet but firm. Refiners have plenty of raws for several weeks' use. The average quotation is 4.77 cents. Refiners all asking 5.85 cents for granulated.—Canned tomatoes unchanged and firm. Futures moderately active. Corn and peas unchanged, both spot and future. —Domestic sardines strong at recently reported advance. Stocks light and situation healthy. Salmon firm, with stocks low.—Prunes about unchanged, with market weak. Some holders willing to shade. Apricots and peaches firm but quiet. Currants strong and dull.—Wheat firmer on cold wave report in the West.—Flour firm at about 25 cents per barrel advance for the week. Buyers taking stock for wants only.

Consider this the best investment I make aside from paying my church obligations. Hope the money will do you as much good as your weekly journal does me. Yours for a bumper 1916.—W. K. Myers, Gardners, Pa.

Who Knows of the Cream of Rice Scheme?

Another Stock Jobbing Deal With the Cream of Rice Retailing at Fifteen Cents and the Stock at Seventy-five Cents. Company Not Listed.

The latest scheme offered to grors is stock in the "Cream of Rice o.," of Chicago:—

———Pa., Jan. 20, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We inclose stamp for nswer to a little matter of importance to us. What can you tell us of the Cream of Rice Co., 119 W. Madison street, Chicago, Ill.? They are packing a product selling at 15 cents per package retail, that promises to be a good thing, and also selling stock at 75 cents a share, par value $1. What do you think of the thing? It might prove a good thing, and they tell us they are started all right. We will inclose some of their advertising for you to read. Please tell us frankly what you think about it.

Thanking you, we remain,
Yours truly, * * * *

The Cream of Rice Co. is not en listed in Bradstreet's. The ents for the sale of stock, H. L. urber & Co., of Chicago, are well own stock promoters. The prodt has not been advertised to conmers at all, so far as we have en, and the staff of this paper, miliar with almost every food product, had never heard of it until the receipt of the above letter. Evidently the scheme is to sell stock to so many grocers that their sales alone will make a business.

We are against all these schemes which comprehend selling stock to a grocer and thus tying him up to sell a product for which there may be no real field in his store. For every one that pays him anything, there are ninety-nine that never pan out at all. When he invests money in such a scheme, he sends it completely out of his sight, out of his reach, out of his control. It may come back, but he will be utterly helpless if it does not.

It is never good for a dealer to be in a position where he is compelled to sell a product, no matter whether good, bad or indifferent, or whether he has any demand for it, merely in order to enable him to come out whole on a stock speculation.

What's the Answer?

You chaps that hang on my slightest word have noticed that I ain't had a lot to say about advertised goods. It ain't that I ain't thought a lot about it—everybody's thought a lot about it. It's the big question, take it from me.

There ain't a bit of doubt that it's easier to sell advertised goods than it is to sell goods that people don't know anything about. That stands to reason. But that ain't the whole thing by a jugfull. It would be easier to sell Royal Baking Powder at 2 cents a can than to sell it at 10 cents a can, but that don't mean it's a good thing to do, does it?

I saw a friend of mine working and sweating to sell some unknown soup last week—him and his whole store. It made me do some thinking.

Seems he bought three cases of canned soup from a jobber. It was the jobber's private brand and he bought it on some sort of a deal.

"That's the best tomato soup I ever had on my table," he told me. "My wife said she never tasted anything like it. But I can't sell it. Nobody ever heard of it and they all call for some advertised soup. What am I going to do?"

"You know the retailer can sell anything," I said. "That's what some people say. Why don't you go to it?"

"How?"

"Why, sell it, that's all," I said. "I can't tell you anything about selling goods."

"By George, I will!" he said. "I'll sell that soup! I've got to sell it!"

Then he told his three clerks before me to get right on the job of selling those three cases of soup until it was gone.

All right. Fine.

I was only there a few minutes so I didn't see how it worked out—not the whole thing, anyway, but I did see one thing. A woman came in and the boss waited on her. She was a regular customer and knew everybody and everybody knew her.

She read off a good long order with two cans of tomato soup on it. She wanted an advertised brand. There was the chance, all cut out.

"Mrs. Patterson," said the boss, "I've got a new tomato soup here that I want you to try. I had some for dinner last night and I never tasted anything like it. My wife says—"

"But why should I change?" said Lady Patterson. "We all like ———— soup. I'd be afraid to give my husband anything else. Why should I change?"

"I think this is better," said the boss.

"But we don't need any better," she said, "we're perfectly satisfied with what we have. Is this any cheaper?"

"Well, I didn't expect to sell it any cheaper," said the boss, "but I'll let you have this for 9 cents."

"No, I don't think so," she answered. "A penny doesn't make any difference. I think I'll just keep on with ————'s. Much obliged all the same."

Say, that "much obliged all the same," was some joke, wasn't it? Thanking him for turning him down! Gee!

Now I want some of you crack-a-jack salesmen to tell me what you would have done then. I can get around hurdles just as well as the next one, but take it from me, I wouldn't have anything more in my bag after that. I know a turn-down when I see one, and I saw one then.

"Well, old man," I said, "you done noble, but it wasn't a go, was it?"

"I don't need you to tell me that!" he said, real snappy. "Tell me how I can sell that soup and you'll be doing something."

"I'll tell you how I expect you'll sell it," I said. "Some day after you've boned all your customers and found 'em all satisfied with what they have—although you'll sell a few cans that way; no doubt about that—you'll empty out the rest in a pile on the table out there and put a sign on 'em, "a nickel a can." Maybe before they all go, the sign'll be changed to read "three cents a can! Oh, you'll get rid o 'em sometime!"

"Not on your life!" he sai "Know what I'll do—I'll make t jobber take 'em back, that's wh I'll do. I simply can't sell the stuf Although I do say it's the best t mato soup I ever ate."

Something coming to the jobb now. I'm sorry for that little o brand of tomato soup. Good as can be, but nobody wants it. Yo can't push it on people.

What's the answer? You ca search me. I don't know.

I heard another customer of mi trying to sell some private bran once, not long ago. It was to a old man, who got peeved.

"What are you trying to d Sam?" he said. "I don't wa anything but what I ordere What's the matter—aren't you mak ing enough on that?"

Fine! Bully! Makes a cha feel so comfortable and so satisfie with himself.

What's the answer? You ca search me. I don't know.

A Criticism of Grocers Which Has Some thing In It

New York Contributor Says Grocers Should Eschew U profitable Goods, and Points to a Class of Availab Substitutes.

We are interested in your editorial, "A Misstatement," page 8, issue of January 17th. We support Mr. Shepard's statement of what we deem a fact, viz., that a manufacturer's success does depend in having the retailer satisfied with his profit. If this is not true in the case of Cream of Wheat or consumer-nationally advertised goods, then your remarks condemn such goods and properly so. At the same time they support Mr. Shepard, although you say otherwise, because it is a well known fact that five hundred articles are not so advertised to one that is, thus procuring their distribution by the hand of the satisfied dealer.

Every advertiser in your pages is striving to make pleasant business relations with dealers that shall be satisfactory to them, and satisfaction to distributors is the basis of all permanent trade.

It must be quite time for dealers to throw out any goods not providing them sufficient profit whether advertised or not. It is also time for your subscribers to add to the lines such goods as pay them suitable profits.

For instance, the writer knows of a good kitchen beater. It cost the dealer $2.80 cents a dozen, r tails at protected price of 35 cent Your subscribers do not handle thi probably considering that the hard ware merchants should not be e croached upon, while they consid the business on egg beaters is goi to the 5-and-10-cent store. Th very place to sell this article is grocery stores where the wom come, as is done in the far We where it is only necessary to sho the article to sell it and make per cent. on the purchase price.

Another thing is a small ste clothes line reel. Your subscribe don't handle it, though they do s clothes lines, but anything of met they consider belongs in the hard ware store. Women buyers of gr ry and hardware stores are about the proportion of 25 to 1. Profit the same on this article. Should ɔt your subscribers handle such ings as this, and is it not worthy your efforts to induce them to ke on meritorious goods that pay em suitable profits for their work, ther than to have those profits ven the national magazines and ken out of the dealer?

There is much talk about the conmer in considering the Stevens ll. That is starting at the wrong d. Unless manufacturers can ake suitable profits there will be goods made—no reward for inntion, and no smoke from the ıcks. Unless distributors can make suitable profits there will still be no sale of goods—there cannot be. So in rotation, we first have the manufacturer, the various distributors and, last of all, the consumer, who must be asked for fair prices only, but those prices necessarily carrying suitable profits to his predecessors. Is not this the fact?

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

As to the Drummer.—Twenty years ɔ a young New Yorker used to make New England territory selling ves and olive oil, but olives were his theme and pet special. The writer s at that time running a line of atty" ads. in the Hartford "Times," l to get hold of this olive man on ry trip was like receiving a new ve lesson by a specialist. In reality was because "Dave" Volk knows this it from seed to picking. From such rces of information the ads. were lt.

By the same token, as we Irish-Amerns say, there are many such specsts on the road—splendid fellows, o not only know their line thorghly, but seem delighted to share ir information with you when so uested.

Coming into contact with drummers a privilege that many of you boys the smaller towns enjoy. Make the t use of it. Cut out the foolish ry telling and the light conversation ich is irrelative to business.

Not long ago a coffee expert called. wanted to see the kind of people were and the kind of store we rked in, to which his firm made so ny shipments. We made him open and tell a lot about Maracaibo, Boa, Santos, Mexican, Arabian Mocha, erior Java, and so on. It was a ofitable visit for us and no doubt an eresting one for him.

If your mind is one of inquiry you l find that the older you grow the re eager you will become to fill that nd with things worth knowing.

Only this afternoon three grades of as were cut for the inspection of a hotel buyer. "Why," said he, "I like these large size peas best and the price is the lowest. The flavor seems so much more natural than the others."

Now, then, just for a starter, will you ask your employer or one of the canned goods drummers whether this is so, and why? It's an interesting answer.

But an answer all the same that you in turn may be glad to know when a similar question may be put to you to-day or to-morrow. Even if the question isn't put, it can be worked in in your sales talk.

And just think of the variety of foods we handle and how comparatively little we know of their selection and their production. Yet in the big, big majority of cases the fault is our own. We're not seekers. We don't talk enough. We're just content to skim along on the surface of things, taking pot luck, which too often means no luck at all. Great as was the master mind of W. E. Gladstone, it is related that he never failed to ask a question of his men servants as soon as he met one. Small wonder it was when one day Mike Dunn said to his fellow workmen, "What does he know at all, at all."

The question habit by no means suggests ignorance, but rather the effort to rise above ignorance, and thus fit ourselves for higher work.

It is just as unreasonable to think you can go ahead in your business without study and hard work as it was for you to get 100 per cent. in geography without pouring over your atlas and locating the rivers and mountains, seas and lakes.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week. Everything is moving out satisfactorily. A good demand is reported for all staple lines at about unchanged prices. The undertone is quite steady.

Coffee.

The coffee market is unchanged for the week. The advance reported a couple of weeks ago seems to have been checked and the heavy undertone is more in evidence now than it was at that time. Brazil is still finding it hard to get shipping and this is all that keeps prices even steady. Rio 7s are steady to firm, but Santos 4s are perhaps a shade lower than a week ago. Milds are in fair position and the situation is steady. Java is firm at prices somewhat above normal. Mocha unchanged.

Sugar.

The sugar situation is stronger. The average quotation for raws during the week has been 4.77 cents, which is due to the fact that Cuba has sold largely for early delivery, both to the United States and Europe. There is also some interruption still with shipping, and the immediate outlook is firm. All refiners are asking 5.85 cents for granulated The domestic beet granulated people have withdrawn from the Eastern market, but there is considerable of this sugar about, selling 20 points below the ordinary refiners' prices.

Fish.

The fish market shows no change for the week. Mackerel rules about the same, with but slight fluctuations and comparatively small demand. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and quiet, and the warm spell of the week did not stay long enough to seriously affect the situation. Domestic sardines are firmer and some packers are asking an advance. Imported sardines still scarce and firm, without change. Salmon is in excellent condition. The demand is good for this time of the year and stocks are not excessive. Everybody reports scarcity of tuna fish. No prices on the new pack have as yet been made.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes, peaches and apricots are holding their own, but the demand is not at all active. Raisins are dull, with the exception of the seedless varieties, which are in excellent demand at full prices. Currants are unchanged.

Canned Goods.

The tomato market is unchanged, with a fair demand for spots, but quite an active demand for futures. Future prices seem reasonable, as the best the packers are figuring is an advance of 10 cents a dozen on the cost over last year. Corn is selling freely, both spot and future, and is firm, with slight advances on some grades. Fancy shoepeg is practically off the market. No price has yet been named on Maine corn, with the probability of still higher price than last year. Peas are selling very freely, the consumption having increased quite materially. Prices remain unchanged. Baltimore goods are in seasonable demand, with no changes worthy of note.

Beans and Peas.

Peas are dull on the spot, although indications point to an advance in primary markets. California lima beans are moving slowly at unchanged prices. Green peas and split peas are in fair demand, with no change.

Butter.

The very unseasonable weather has interfered with the demand for the top grades of butter and the market is steady at 1 cent decline from a week ago. Undergrades remain steady and unchanged. No further change is expected in the immediate future. The make is about normal for the season.

Eggs.

Fresh eggs are beginning to increase and the quality arriving is averaging fancy. The market is ruling to-day about 2 cents per dozen lower than a week ago. The market is steady on the present basis of quotations and the future price depends entirely on weather conditions.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm at about ¼ cent per pound advance over last week, with a normal consumptive demand and a good export demand. The stocks are reported to be less than they were a year ago. No change from the present basis of quotations is looked for.

Provisions.

The demand for everything in the smoked meat line is light, at prices ranging the same as last week. Pure lard is steady at about ¼ cent advance, while compound is having a good consumptive demand at ⅛ cent per pound advance. Barreled pork, canned meats and dried beef are steady, with a moderate demand at unchanged prices.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Standard Canned Goods.

Increased buying of tomatoes for future delivery is the strong feature in this market, and the outlook is favorable for a still larger demand. The orders for them are coming from those markets that always buy here, as well as from large Western markets that do not come here to buy "futures," especially in the month of January, excepting when it is to their advantage to do so. The activity in future tomatoes commenced right after the first of the year and the orders have increased each week in size as well as in number. When the big can manufacturers published their list of higher prices for the 1916 deliveries, and the advance in empty cases and all the others items became known, there was immediate action in "future" tomatoes. The tomato growers demand for the 1916 crop an advance over last year's price, and they will obtain it. In fact, many canners are already signing up contracts. It is important, we believe, for the buyers to be careful to see that "the man behind the contract" this season is reliable, and financially responsible for the performance of his part. We offer those same brands that you have handled satisfactorily in previous seasons.

Spot tomatoes are strong and fairly active, with no indications of yielding in price. On the contrary, the trend is toward a higher range of prices. The volume of business done in tomatoes during January will put many good-sized lots in line for prompt consumption, and to that extent help to reduce the visible supply. Intending buyers may feel safe in buying tomatoes for prompt delivery. Shipments can be made in refrigrator cars with little or no risk of the goods freezing on the road.

Sweet potatoes were again active this week and the prices advanced, with strong indications of going higher because of lighter offerings. They are worth immediate attention. Spinach is also worth attention; look after it now if wanted. If half of the inquiries for spot corn result in buying orders, that article will become active. The demand this week for the other vegetables was light and there were no changes of interest.

Fruits of all kinds were dull this week, excepting for some better buying of pears of the different grades. There is very seldom any demand here for canned fruits during January, excepting for small lots to piece out broken stocks, and this month is no exception.

The over-due spell of cold weather arrived last week, but did not last long, though it caused higher prices for raw oysters and a firm market for cove oysters, with an increase in the demand.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

There is no change here in the local evaporated apple market, shippers reporting a very light volume of business. The evaporators are firm holders, however, and this prevents any decline in prices. The export situation does not improve, and this is keeping speculators from buying.

Prime quality in 50-pound boxes is offered in carload lots at 5¾ to 6 cents; choice, 6¾ to 7 cents, and fancy, 8½ to 9 cents.

Imported Fish Specialties.

In spite of the approaching Lenten season, which, by the way, is very late this year, Holland herrings are selling only in a small hand-to-mouth way, just because they are so very high in price. The same thing may be said of Scotch herrings, but herrings of desirable quality are few and far between. Norway herrings continue to sell in a regular way, although the trade is not falling over each other to buy large quantities —also on account of high prices.

There has been no improvement in the Norwegian mackerel trade. There has been a much better demand, and if the present demand continues the stocks of this year's Norway mackerel will very soon be cleared, in spite of their high prices.

There is an excellent demand for sardines of all kinds—French, Portuguese and Norwegian, and stocks are being cleared rapidly, and it will not be long before none of the old stocks will be left for sale. Of course, new goods from France cannot be had, very little is coming forward from Portugal, because they are having no catch at the present time. In Norway, where anticipated that prices for sardi would decline, on account of the En lish restrictions on the sale of sardi and other preserved goods to Germa and Austria, the situation has chang unexpectedly, because Russia has co in as a buyer, and, naturally, as lo as the packers in Norway can dispo of their goods at those high prices Russia, they are not over-anxious make lower prices to this country, a at the present asking prices, we simp cannot import the goods, because could not sell them at the prices whi they would calculate.

The market not so active this we though most articles are in fair d mand. Stocks here are narrow and t question of futures has become ve uncertain. Ocean freights have aga advanced to rates never before hea of.

Pepper.—Firm in all grades and fairly steady demand for spot goo The attitude of the Government holding up shipments of peppers, pri cipally in Lampong, has been very mu criticized by those in the trade.

Red Peppers.—Are steady, but u changed in all respects.

Cloves.—Are selling quickly on a rival. Spot stocks are unusually sma

Pimento (Allspice).—In fair dema at generally unchanged prices.

Mace.—Exceedingly scarce for grades. Prices are somewhat higher.

Nutmegs.—The increasing dema has had a tendency to harden pric in all grades. Stocks here are unu ually small and we look for high prices on all sizes.

Cassias.—Very firm in all position Prices, while unchanged, are likely go much higher. Stocks are unusual short.

Gingers.—Better trade demand a fairly active. Higher prices are no being quoted by English holders.

Tapiocas.—Steady, fairly active, b generally unchanged.

Paprikas.—While unchanged in pri the tone is firmer. This is due to hig er import cost and higher freights.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—Are general firmer and higher, especially caraw coriander and mustard. There is co siderable uncertainty as to the import tion of seeds and herbs. The situati is a critical one and very high pric are possible under existing condition

No. 348.—The Latest Victor Price-Fixing Decision Again Upsets the Law.

The latest decision in the Victor Talking Machine fixed price case reverses what was previously the law, and rather completely changes the aspect of the subject of price-fixing on patented articles. Unless the United States Supreme Court reverses this latest decision, any manufacturer of a patented article or preparation can distribute his product in such a way as to absolutely fix and preserve the retail price at the figure which he makes.

I made some reference to this case, as it then was, in May, 1915. At that time the first decision had just been given. The facts briefly were these: The Victor Talking Machine Co. devised a plan of selling its machines and its records which it believed would give it complete control over wholesale and retail prices. The Victor concern had of course patented its machines and its records. Everything, in fact, about its whole enterprise is tied up with patents. Every machine and every record had printed on it a notice that they were not sold, but that the Victor Company merely licensed the right to use them. The title to both machine and records remained in the Victor until the patents expired. This "license" could be revoked the minute somebody—buyer or licensee, whichever you like—broke the Victor Co.'s rules, the most important of which was of course the rule to sell at a fixed price. And if the price was cut the Victor Co., under its contract, could go in and take its goods back.

The "license to use" was granted upon the payment to the Victor Co. in the beginning of a sum which the Victor Co. called a "royalty," but which corresponded exactly with the price charged both for machine and records.

Macy & Co., the New York department storekeepers, cut the price of Victor records, and the Victor Co. promptly revoked their license to sell and demanded the return of all unsold goods on the ground that breaking the price condition constituted an infringement of its patents! Macy & Co. resisted, and the Victor Co. then applied to the United States District Court in New York for an injunction, damages, etc., to prevent Macy & Co. from continuing to cut prices. The court decided in favor of Macy & Co., saying that inasmuch as the Victor Co. had collected the whole royalty in the beginning, instead of in installments like royalties are usually collected, it showed that it was after all not a license, but a sale, and being a sale, the Victor Co. could not interfere with the retail selling price.

Had this decision stood, it would have practically made manufacturers of patented products, in spite of the monopoly which the law gives them, helpless against the attacks of cutters, unless they wished to go to the extraordinary trouble and expense of constituting dealers their agents instead of selling them outright. The Diamond Match Co. tried this but gave it up on account of the tremendous detail which it involved.

This decision has now been upset by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, which decides that the royalty scheme is not a subterfuge, that the Victor Company intended to retain control of its products and its prices, and that its plan of selling is sufficient to do that. I have obtained a copy of the decision and reproduce enough of it to show the court's view:—

> This case presents the familiar one of the manufacturer of a patented article undertaking to extend its use and at the same time regulate the terms and conditions under which it shall be used. It seeks to accomplish this in part by a written contract entered into between itself and every so-called licensed dealer to whom it delivers the possession of instruments or records. This need not be recited, as in substance it is the same as a so-called "License Notice" which is attached to a conspicuous part of every machine. This notice varies only in the statement of the amount of royalty, which of course is different for different types of machine.
> A study of these various documents leads to the conclusion that complainant has undertaken to avoid making such a sale of its machine as would permanently pass it beyond any further control by itself. We think it has succeeded in so doing; this is not a sale outright, or a conditional or restricted sale, or any sale at all.
> Under the authorities the owner of a patent who manufactures machines under such patent can give the right to use to whom he pleases upon what conditions he may choose to impose. Some of those conditions may involve pecuniary return, such as royalties, rentals for fixed periods, specified lump sum compensation for the whole period. We do not see why he may not give to one person a more restricted right to use than he does to another.
> For each one of such machines the person to whom a right to use the same is granted and a machine delivered, to be by him used, shall pay a lump sum, which varies with the type of machine.
> This is called a royalty; in effect it is a payment in advance covering use for the entire term—down to the expiration of the last patent. During such term, the restrictions as to parts, integrity of notice, needles, records, etc., are in force and the manufacturer reserves title in itself. Of course, when the patents expire no such restrictions could be maintained and, therefore, when that time comes any licensee (or user) in whose hands a machine may be and who has faithfully observed the conditions, shall receive full title to the same.
> The documents are long and complicated, but it seems to us that this is what they provide for. We do not know why, under the law and the authorities a patentee may not thus dispose temporarily of the use and ultimately of the title of a machine made by him and protected by his patent.

I regard this as one of the most important decisions yet made on this subject, because it opens the way for every manufacturer of a patented product—and perhaps of a trade-marked product also—to make his distributors take his goods in such a way that they do not get title, and having no title, they are obliged to sell at prices which the manufacturer dictates, because t are still the manufacturer's goo In other words, it creates in round-about way the agency wh alone gives the manufacturer c trol of his goods until they re the consumer, bnt without the bo keeping detail which attends the dinary agency plan.

There is much force in the ar ment that this decision also app to trade-marked goods, for owner of a trade-mark has just complete a monopoly in it as owner of a patent has.

Five Cent Bread Must Go, Says Bak

According to a big Chicago bak S. W. Tredway, of the W. E. Long C eventually the 5-cent loaf must The buying habit of the people mu be changed from the 5-cent to the cent loaf. "The reasons for this ne essary change are clear to every thin ing baker who has noted the stead rising cost of production in the bre business. This is largely due to t rapid readjustment that has been ma in the past few years in the raisi of the standards of the baking indust to its present high plane. To-day t baking of bread is a business. A fe years ago it was one of the most lowl if not the most despised of all bus nesses. It could hardly be called business. In this change from cha to organization and high standards, e penses were added which the busine did not know before. Heavy inves ments in substantial buildings, equipp with sanitary conveniences, install tions of modern machinery, checkin and accounting systems. More expe sive delivery equipment, expense fo training salesmen, expense for labor tory training for superintendents, a vertising and other promotion plans, de preciation on equipment and with ove head expenses that have kept mountin higher with each succeeding year; an finally the wrapping of bread, whic has now become almost universal."

One View of the Stevens Bill.

Andover, Ohio, Jan. 18, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We are a cut-price store to some extent, cutting about the same percentage from the "established" price that we save through doing business for cash only and without a delivery system.

While we do believe in a restricted price on standard goods, we are afraid that the same manufacturer who makes and sells now through the retailer a standard advertised article could and would make goods for the catalogue house under its own brand and allow it to be sold at a less figure than the advertised goods.

This done, the mail-order house would still have the advantage over the retailer who sold advertised and restricted price goods only.

Your opinions on the Stevens bill now pending prove to be very interesting and instructive to me.

Yours truly,
COLE'S VARIETY STORE,
Walter Cole, Manager.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We understand the co-operative delivery system is being successfully used in several places.

Some of the merchants in this place would like to consider this method of delivery. If you could give us any information on the subject, or advise us where this system is being used, we would greatly appreciate your kindness.

Yours truly,
A. W. LODER & SONS.

Co-operative delivery has flourished more in the West than the East. Twenty-five towns in Kansas use co-operative delivery systems. The largest town, Independence, has a population of 12,500, and the smallest, Scranton, has 800.

Schuyler, Neb., with 3,000 population, also uses co-operative system, as do other towns in that State.

Dry Goods Business Very Good.

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:—

Current wholesale distribution of goods is in excess of a year ago. Reports from various points over the country indicate that retail January sales are very active.

Road sales are running about the same as a year ago, and more customers have been in the market.

Collections are normal.

Prices are firm.

A Sales Repeater

FLEISCHMANN'S YEAST

is purchased, say, two or three times every week by the housewife who bakes. And every time she comes in for a "cake of yeast" you have a fine chance to to talk up and sell her other things too.

When You See Your Jobber, Ask Him This

The next time you talk with your jobber, ask him which he would rather fill—a specialty order with one of the above stamps on it, or one without. Some jobbers will tell you that very often they won't even accept a specialty order without a stamp on it.

Now there must be some reason for that, and there is. It is the same reason which makes you safer when you sign a specialty order with a stamp on it. No stamp or insignia used in business practice means as much as the specialty stamp. It means everything included in a guarantee of prompt and fair dealing.

Dear Sir:—Having recently become a subscriber to your paper, designed to help the retailer, I beg to submit this copy of our little trade paper, which we publish in an effort to combat the mail order competitors.

Yours truly,
WALTER COLE, Manager,
Cole's Variety Store.

The advertising that accompanied this was quite unique—I never saw anything like it. It was an 8-page pamphlet, 4½ x 8 inches, entitled "Cole's Varieties." The first inside page contained the argument, and the balance consisted of nothing but prices except page 6, which was jokes, and at the foot of the last page, where appeared a "special sugar offer," which was 25 pounds cane granulated sugar for $1 with each $10 purchase of groceries not including sugar or flour.

WHAT WE THINK

The values offered at this store for the people are found to be extremely interesting.

On many items in our stock, we quote the same price as asked by our competitors -the big Catalog houses.

Our Sugar offer printed on page 8 of this issue is sure to be of interest to anyone wishing to invest ten dollars in Groceries and save freight charges amounting to about 5% or. a shipment of 100 pounds.

It will be of interest to us to hear from our customers and receive criticism or suggestions relating to this little paper or to our store.

It seems to me that the printer might have done better for Mr. Cole than he has done. He has produced a rather crude paper. The facsimile typewriter type is not the best, I think, for a publication of this sort. There is hardly any reason to use such type except in places where a typewriter could have been properly used, as in a letter or facsimile letter. I should have used ordinary plain type for the body of this paper, of about the same size or a little smaller.

Where the goods advertised in this paper are well known trade-marked goods, like Karo syrup, the advertisement is strong enough as it is, and as a competitive proposition will have weight. A lot of the goods advertised, however, are not trade-marked. Such as hair brushes, gas mantles, etc. I think something more should have been said about their quality. If you are intending this as a special smash at the mail-order house, I should have emphasized the fact that the goods advertised here are the same as the mail-order house advertises, or better. A woman who has been buying milk pans at 9 cents of the mail-order house sees that you offer milk pans of the same size at 9 cents also, but that doesn't mean much to her. Her preference is for the mail-order house, and she would say to herself that the mail-order pan was better. I should have said in the most positive way that your pan was identical with the mail-order pan, if you know that to be a fact.

* * *

The merchant who starts in to fight the mail-order house has got his work cut out for him, and he cannot go to it half equipped. He should know what goods the mail-order house is offering, their quality, the name of their manufacturer and all about them. To get that information he will often have to send for the goods himself. After he gets them, he can talk to the point. He can display the mail-order goods in the window, side by side with his own, showing that they are identical. He can strike then with a force that he will never have unless he has definite and exact information to begin with.

Fifty Years in One Place.

That's the record of C. Wilkin Sons, at 134 Dock street, Philadel Just think what that means in the and vegetable business; how changes have been made; how the ing and shipping has grown changed; how almost everything is ferent than fifty years ago—yet this has always stood in the forefront honest dealing and careful han both of the people from whom receive and to whom they sell. keynote is service—prompt ship qualities that you may rely upon, prices based upon an ability to tak vantage of every market change. this can be summed up to mean liability—which in the fruit busine the one big thing. To know yo buy perishable goods that will arri time and in good condition means than any other single factor.

If You Handle Fruits Read This

Several years ago we looked inward at our business and decided that the best way of besting competition was to sell service as well as fruit.

That's what we have since done. We have a carefully worked-out system by which when we sell fruit we give the following as bonuses:—

1. Prompt shipment.
2. Qualities the customer can absolutely rely on.
3. Prices based on the widest buying facilities and eyes open in all directions.

We have sold fruits, vegetables and nuts right here for over fifty years. Some customers have been with us for thirty years—a long time to hold anybody who was dissatisfied.

Are you receiving our price-list regularly each week? If not, a postal will bring it to your desk.

MODERN MERCHANT AND GROCERY WORLD

VOL. LXI. PHILADELPHIA, February 7, 1916. No. 6

The grocer who has created the impression that no goods are quite so good as his, no store quite so pleasant as his, no service quite so friendly and accommodating as his, will hold most of his customers no matter how many Economy stores there are. Who can create that impression? Every grocer who deserves to.

Chase-O is an absolutely perfect product. It will cut the work of washing in half. We would be exceedingly foolish to make this statement if it wasn't true. ¶ We struck a grocer not long ago that wouldn't have anything but Wheatena on his own table, but wouldn't stock it because he thought he handled enough cereals!

¶ Could anything surpass the inconsistency of that? How many of his customers were as insistent about a cereal as he was about Wheatena?

¶ That really is typical of the way Wheatena gets and stays in. Packed and guaranteed quite differently from other cereals.

Is the Pennsylvania State Insurance Fund for Workmen's Compensation Sound?

Old Companies Say That the Employers Who Take Workmen's Compensation Insurance With the State Are Taking a Great Risk. Charge That the Politieal Control, and the Laek of Large Finaneial Baeking and So On, Are Chief Elements of Weakness. Assistant Manager of the State Fund Answers These Arguments.

[There has for several months been a controversy on between the regular liability insurance companies, who are writing business under the Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Act, and the State Workmen's Insurance Fund, which is writing business in competition with the old companies, but at 10 per cent. lower rate. The old companies have not hesitated to say that the State Fund would probably fail, because it was run by politicians, who never succeeded in any business venture; because it had no financial strength compared with the old companies, and so on. All this is of paramount interest to the large number of employers who have insured with the State Fund, of which there are about 7,000 so far. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has received a statement from Albert L. Allen, assistant manager of the State Workmen's Insurance Fund, in which he seeks to refute all the arguments which are made against the State Fund. The greater part of this statement appears below.—Ed.]

The premium income of the State Workmen's Compensation Insurance Fund for 1916 will undoubtedly exceed one million dollars. More than 7,000 employers from all sections of Pennsylvania have insured their compensation liability in the State Fund and at the present time the premium income is approximately $700,000. This volume of business places the State Fund among the leaders of the companies writing this class of insurance in Pennsylvania.

The financial soundness of the State Fund is definitely assured within the first month of its existence. Virtually every class of risk is represented among the 7,000 policies issued, with a preponderance of exceptionally good risks. The prediction that the State Fund would be the dumping ground for undesirable risks, known in insurance parlance as "cats and dogs," has been completely disproved by the actual experience of the fund.

The success of the State Fund has been achieved in spite of marked antagonism regrettably noticeable in the activities for business by some insurance agents and brokers, who have constantly argued that the State Fund could not be successful.

As a matter of arithmetic, it might be well to consider the present status of the State Fund with the status of any stock company which may be considered to have written a proportionate amount of insurance. The State Fund has, as premium income, $700,000 with which to pay claims. That aggregate amount more than represents what competent actuaries have decided from past experience is adequate to meet all claims accruing from the classes of employment the separate policies cover.

A stock company considered as having written a proportionate amount of business would have approximately $778,000 of premium income because the State Fund may write insurance at 90 per cent. of the rates allowed stock companies. But the stock company figures on using only 57½ per cent. of the $778,000 for the actual payments of claims. The other 42½ per cent. goes for overhead charges, agents' and brokers' commissions on the securing of business and for profits.

Thus the stock company would have approximately $447,000 to pay claims from $778,000 premium income. On the other hand, the State Fund has $700,000 with which to meet the same claims that the stock company would figure on paying out of approximately $447,000.

This advantageous condition in favor of the State Fund is due to the fact that the Legislature has appropriated the funds to pay all operating costs of the State Fund, excepting the payment of claims. A comparison of the amount the State Fund has available for the payment of claims with the amount the stock companies deem adequate graphically depicts why the State Fund will be able to return proportionately to its subscribers at the end of the year substantial dividends and afford them even cheaper insurance than the initial 10 per cent. reduction provided.

Catastrophes cannot impair the financial stability of the State Workmen's Insurance Fund. The catastrophe hazard of the State Fund has been reinsured in excess of $50.000. That means that any single catastrophe in which employees were killed or injured to create claims of say $150,000 against the State Fund, every dollar in excess of $50,000 for those claims would be paid from other sources than from the revenues of the State Workmen's Insurance Fund.

Unsuccessful insurance funds operated by one or two other States are cited as examples of failure of State insurance, although the cases are in no sense parallel with Pennsylvania. The West Virginia State Fund is cited as a fund that became bankrupt. The West Virginia Fund was compelled by the Legislature to charge a rate not to exceed $1 per one hundred dollars of annual payroll, even for the most hazardous risks. That amount was declared inadequate and experience has proved it to be inadequate, especially in a coal mining State.

By way of contrast with the West Virginia State Fund, the New York State Fund may be cited as one which has been eminently successful and has paid dividends averaging 20 per cent.

Another threadbare argument advanced against the State Fund is that it does not cover public liability, nor does it pay damages for disfigurement. The State Fund does not sell public liability insurance at all. A stock company that sells compensation insurance may also sell public liability insurance, but the sale of public liability insurance is a separate transaction and the rate must be separate from and additional to the rate charged for the compensation risk.

The argument that the State Fund does not protect an employer against common law action for disfigurement, loss of services, etc., on account of injuries sustained by an employee under the Compensation Act is negligible. The employee who has accepted the provisions of the Compensation Act has no recourse at common law.

The State Workmen's Insurance Fund offers as its advantages compensation liability insurance at cost. Its initial rate is 10 per c below the rate charged by s companies with the prospect of stantial dividends at the end of year. The State Fund offer guarantee of absolutely no ass ment against its subscribers. It moves absolutely from an empl the probability of a lien being tered against his property. It is only form of insurance which give this advantage. The liab of an employer insured in the S Fund is transferred immediatel the fund when an employee is jured. The employer's propert secure against liens that the inju employee might enter to prevent sale of the employer's propert he were insured in a private c pany.

Only two of the nine samples were found to conform with the minimum standard, and none of the grapefruits are to be considered as of good quality when judged by the ratio of acid to solids.

The sale of this class of citrus fruits is a positive detriment in that people soon discontinue buying altogether and the sale of a valuable article is much lessened, whereas the offering of good products would be followed by largely increased demands.

Aluminum Advertising Company Loses Again.

Another case wherein the Aluminum Advertising Co., of Maywood, Ill., a scheme company, previously referred to in these columns, which takes notes from retailers which it "sells" to other people, attempted to enforce payment for aluminum ware in connection with its "punch card" scheme, has recently been decided in favor of a grocer who resisted payment on the ground that the transaction was fraudulent. This case was decided in the Circuit Court at St. Louis, the defendant being C. Goebel, a grocer, doing business at 6102 Delmar avenue. Goebel, however, did not give the company his note, but a check dated 30 days ahead, which operated practically the same as a note. This case has been in the courts for nearly a year and a half, the Aluminum Advertising Co. securing a verdict in a Justice Court, Goebel appealing from the decision. This case was one coming under the "innocent purchaser" act, the check having been transferred to L. H. Watson, who was the president of the "Aluminum Ware Co." of Maywood, Ill. According to Mr. Goebel's story, the agent of the aluminum concern appeared at his store in the spring of 1914 and sold him 40 pieces of aluminum ware at $2 each, agreeing to bring him 100 customers for the goods, who would sign the punch cards. Mr. Goebel paid $40 in cash and gave a check for $40, but he took the precaution to date the check 30 days ahead as a protection in case the company did not fulfill its contract to furnish the customers. Later the solicitor came into the store with the cards, but stated that he could not turn them in to Goebel, as they first had to go into the office. This was the last the grocer heard of the cards, but no customers appeared, indicating that they were not genuine, and Mr Goebel found himself with the aluminum ware on his hands, which it was impossible to sell at any price. He then stopped payment on the check. The court has now decided in his favor.

This Man Says the "Stroller's" Friend Didn't Use Intelligence in Introducing Unknown Brand of Canned Soup Outlines a Plan of Free Sampling, Which is Largely in Use by Manufacturers. Would Be Good for Business, Even if it Didn't Get the Soup In.

In your issue of January 31st there is an article headed, "What's the Answer?" signed "The Stroller," and discussing the sale of unknown brands. It seems to me that both the "Stroller" and his friend missed a trick in the Mrs. Patterson's case. What should have been done here is this. If the unknown soup was as good as the grocer claimed, and he was anxious to establish it, he should have taken a leaf from our manufacturing friend's note book and given Mrs. Patterson a can to try. That could have been done with the remark, "All right, Mrs. Patterson, I believed as you believed that such and such a soup was the very best on the market until I tried this. I am now convinced that this is far superior. I am so certain that your judgment will agree with mine that I am going to ask you to try it with my compliments."

Can you see Mrs. Patterson refusing a free can of soup?

Manufacturers gladly give samples in order to get their goods started and in many cases they give full size packages. If I had been the grocer and wanted to introduce that soup very badly I would have made a list of my customers who were regular users of soup and given each one a can to try, instilling the thought that this soup was better than any other on the market. Suppose I had to give away two or three dozen, the entire cost would not have been over $2 or $3. In doing this I would establish a reputation for being generous, thus tieing my trade to me closer than ever. I would also have this asurance: No one in my locality would be able to cut the price and the chance is the advertised brand is being sold, if not regularly, at times, three for a quarter.

The grocer was likely buying his soup for less than what the advertised brand cost, so it would not take long for him to make up the expense of the sampling. This is being done by live dealers all the time. Men who are not in a rut, who are keeping their eyes open to see what is going on around them, have soon found ways to introduce high grade profitable goods.

Some years ago I was handling a line of mighty fine spices, so good that I did not believe it possible for any to be better, with the result I refused for a long time to look at any samples. Final salesman came to me and said have without question the fi line of spices on the market. know that you believe that y are the best, but I am sure th can convince you if you will me the opportunity, that they do begin to compare with mine mine do not cost any more." luctantly I examined these sp and found that what I had posed to be the best were now near the equal of the others. taught me a lesson that I never forgotten.

Jewel Tea Co. Shining Example of Value of Premiu New Anti-Monopoly Law Suit. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, February 4, 1916.

The Jewel Tea Co., about which some reference was made last week, is in some respects one of the most remarkable concerns in the United States. It is perhaps the greatest living proof of the value of premiums in building up a business.

Premiums offered by the Jewel Tea Co. consist of all kinds of heavy aluminum utensils, chinaware, glassware, mirrors, etc.

The plan on which the company operates is unique. The route wagon man approaches a housewife and offers to give her any one of the premiums with her first pound of coffee or tea. Delivery of the premium is made on the spot, the premium in each case being worth much more than the coffee or tea purchased. The premium, however, remains the property of the company until the purchases total a certain amount. If the consumer discontinues buying before the required amount is purchased, then the premium goes back to the company. The purchaser is not obligated to buy any certain amount, but is obligated to return the premium if that amount is not purchased. The unusual and impelling feature of the scheme is that the consumer gets a valuable premium on the first purchase. It is the trading stamp scheme reversed. Of course, all sales are for spot cash.

The Jewel Tea Co. was organized in Chicago in 1899, with a capital of $700 One year later its assets were about $4,000 and it owned one wagon. In 1904 the capital stock was increased to $25,000 and two years after that to $500,000. The president, Mr. F. V. Skiff, says that only about $40,000 in cash was invested in the business. balance represents earnings. This wonderful achievement, when it i membered that the company now c assets of $3,500,000, and it is now creasing its capitalization to $16,000

In the statements which are now ing used to sell the increase in company's stock, it is said that in the gross sales were $1,737,000, the gross sales in 1915 were $7,750 The net earnings for 1915 were $1, 000. The largest part of the comp business is from house-to-house, the company claims to have a mi customers. It is the largest tea coffee peddling business concern i world.

Burk's Fresh Sausage

Composed entirely of selected tender pieces of pork, not the ordinary trimmings commonly used. Not cheapened in price and quality by the addition of tripe, boiled rice and sundry substitutes. Correctly seasoned, not offensive to sensitive stomachs because of pungent herbs. Nutritious. In four styles — hashed fine and coarse, linked and in straight casings.

Burk's Philadelphia Scrapple

Prepared from the very best materials—good, wholesome meats and extra fine corn meal. Well boiled and seasoned to suit the most critical. Not to be compared with some cheap products of doubtful hues and colors. Burk's eats as good as it looks. Superior to farmers' products. In pans of 15 pounds each.

Burk's Pig Souse

is a seasonable specialty prepared fresh daily, in pans of five pounds each. The jelly is clear and transparent and free from vegetable gelatines and ill-smelling glue stock. Contains plenty of meat and garnished with slices of lemon and parsley.

Proves attractive when turned out of the pan, and is a quick seller, saving the consumer the trouble of cooking pig's feet, so difficult to obtain at this season of the year.

Burk's Liver Pudding

Of the usual "Burk" standard—clean and unadulterated. Rich in quality and an excellent dish when fried, or, after removing the casing, hashed with potatoes. In rings of 1 pound each.

Another Important Concession as to the Stevens Bill.

It appears that the American Fair Trade League, which is composed of manufacturers who are working for the Stevens bill (which would permit manufacturers of trade-marked products to fix the retail price) has been compelled to make still another recession from the stiff-necked and selfish position assumed sometime ago.

The original Stevens bill, as to trade-marked merchandise, would have completely killed a custom which has marked the retail trade from time immemorial; i. e., the custom of cleaning up odds and ends of stock at a price. As this paper repeatedly pointed out, no odds and ends of trade-marked goods could have been cleaned up at a price unless the manufacturer agreed, which he almost never would do.

Secretary Whittier pooh-poohed this argument with great contempt. He tried to show from the wording of the act why it was not true, and when that failed, he urged that manufacturers could be depended upon to be accommodating, but even this did not satisfy. Now he has amended his bill, which he should have done in the beginning. The following is the new portion:

> (c) Such contracts for the sale of such article or articles of commerce may provide for seasonal disposal sales, twice yearly at appropriate times, by dealers at retail, during which periods, duly set forth in such statement or in such schedule of prices as shall be filed by such vendor, such dealers at retail may sell such article or articles of commerce for a price other than the uniform price as set forth in the schedule provided in the preceding paragraph (b): Provided, That such article or articles of commerce shall have first been offered to the vendor, by such dealer at retail, by written offer, at the price paid for the same by such dealer, and that such vendor, not less than 30 days prior to the date set forth for the next seasonal disposal sale, after reasonable opportunity to inspect such article or articles, shall have refused or neglected to accept such offer.

This allows clean-up sales twice a year, at a price, provided the retailer has first tried to sell the goods back to the manufacturer at the price paid, and been refused. This is much better than the first bill, but why limit the clean-up sales to twice a year? In the case of perishable trade-marked goods such as cereals, I cannot see a twice-a-year sale bringing much benefit to the grocer.

The chance is that after the American Fair Trade League has been compelled to correct some more of the injustices of the Stevens bill, it may become a worthy measure, well worth passing.

Support This Bill.

There was a bill introduced in Congress last Monday which should at once be given the support of the united mercantile interests of the United States. It prohibits the shipment into interstate commerce of any product which is misbranded. It is one of the curious inconsistencies of our national life that no such measure has appeared before. Such a bill as to food and drugs has existed since 1906, but products other than food and drugs have continuously been misbranded almost without restriction. I say what I have repeatedly said before, and nobody has ever denied it, that all products ought to be treated like food and drugs are treated. As obvious as that seems, nobody seems to have been especially struck with its force up to this time.

The man who starts out to find products that will have to change their status if the Barkley bill becomes a law, will not need to go more than ten feet to get plenty of material. I will cite one case. There is at present being shipped in interstate commerce, and advertised and sold in many States, a product sold as mule's skin. Naturally everybody believes it to be the hide of a mule, used for the same purposes as horsehide. Yet it is nothing but an imitation leather. This product couldn't last a week if the food law applied to it, for it is a plain case of misbranding. If the Barkley bill passes, it and a thousand other frauds like it, will take new names over night.

False Statements About the Mail Order Business.

An article on the mail-order business in last week's "Outlook" has some interesting statements in it. The writer, Theodore H. Price, says that his investigations show that an article which would cost $1.75 in an average retail store, can be bought for $1.37 from a mail-order house, plus the freight or postage. The expense of doing a mail-order business he finds is 20 per cent. on selling price and the net profit 10 per cent. on cost. The saving of 37½ per cent. by buying through the mail-order house comes from the elimination of the jobber, who costs the deal, according to his calculation, 23 per cent., and the fact that the expense and profit of the mail-order house are both lower than those of the average retailer. Mr. Price figures that the average article that the retailer gets $1.75 for was sold by the manufacturer at $1.

The opposition of the local retailer to mail-order houses is thus dismissed as of no importance:—

> When mail order houses commenced to succeed they were attacked because it was alleged that they were ruining the "home merchant" by underselling him. This criticism need not be seriously considered. It is one that is always directed at any machine or organization that adds to human wealth or comfort by saving labor or i creasing economic efficiency.
> The truth is that any dev which reduces the cost of the thin men consume must add to t wealth of the community; a while it may result in the temp rary displacement of some o class, it is ultimately to the adva tage of all because it reduces t cost of living and adds to the co fort of existence.

Of course the question is, the mail-order house help n people than it hurts? If it ena a thousand people to save mo and in the process destroys on two retailers, I suppose we w have to admit that it comple justified its existence. But it is true that the mail-order house a ages such a saving as Mr. P mentions. Every retailer who compared mail-order prices with own, knows that there is no s difference as that. If there w the mail-order house would doing five times its present busin and the retailers would be d like flies from its competition.

The mail-order house offers s things cheap and other things d when freight charges are con ered.

Food Law Violators and Citizenship.

The follow is from a Phila phia paper of Wednesday:

> Two food law violators were r fused citizenship papers by Judg Rogers in Quarter Sessions Cou yesterday on the ground that b their offenses they had prove themselves to be undesirable.
> The applicants turned down b the Court were Morris Bressler, 1643 N. Marshall street, and Josep Gratz, of 1023 Poplar street. Bres ler was convicted in January, 191 of selling rotten eggs for food pu poses and was fined $200. Gra was twice convicted in six year the first time for selling unwhol some meat and again for selli unborn calf for food purposes.

Now this may have been the thing that ought to have b done, and it may have been rankest injustice. Not all violati of the food laws make a man u to be a citizen, though some without a doubt. Many a c scientious and careful grocer been caught in some food law v lation which involved absolut no moral guilt. To deprive a m of citizenship for that would b crime. I don't know anythi about the cases against Bressler a Teach your clerks to be careful in all things. Not to give overweight or underweight. Not to handle stock carelessly. Weight and Measure Regulation Changed.

A modification of the regulations for arking the weight or measure of the ntents of food packages has been nounced by the United States Dertment of Agriculture in Food Inection Decision 163. This permits e use of fractions in indicating eight and measure when there exists definite trade custom for their use. nder previous rulings a package conining one-half gallon should be arked as two quarts, but now it may marked as one-half gallon. This cision permits the use of the metric stem in marking food packages, when is system is preferred, and specifies e terms in which weight or measure ould be stated when the metric sysm is used.

The Eelgrass of Business—Look Out for It

Chicago Contributor Likens Some Men's Business to a Boat Race That One Contestant Lost by Eelgrass. How to Know Eelgrass and How to Avoid It.

Back in 1883 or thereabout, when Yale and Harvard were rowing their annual boat race, the Yale coxswain steered his boat too near the eastern shore of the river. Suddenly the Yale boat's speed slackened—dropped to less than half, and Harvard, rowing no harder or better than Yale, won by nearly a mile. Eelgrass—a seaweed—had lost Yale the race!

This is the time of the year—the "balancing" time with the ledger—when we're all forced to see "where we're at." We've been rowing a race for twelve months. Have we won it—or lost? If lost—what's the why?

Each for himself now knows which it is. But whether a gain or a loss, our boat may have been in the eelgrass.

Do you know the dangers of eelgrass in business? They are many, and some like the eelgrass, lie out of sight. Their chief sign is slackening of speed. Be sure you're awake to the symptom.

If you see from the year's trial balance you need to do better next year or "go broke", or want to do better just to increase your profits, whichever the reason, examine your business for eelgrass.

Some of the things to examine are these:—

Is your buying as wise as it should be? Do you buy the things which sell best—what your trade really needs? Or do you buy what you want—because of profit per pound—but through which, in the end, you make far less money because of slow sales. If so, change your system—make your "turnovers" quickly. Slow sales indicate eelgrass.

Do you watch carefully your credits? What percentage of profits did you lose last year? Find the why of the losses—who made them. And was it the fault of the collecting? These things are long eelgrass.

Have you tried to get business by cutting of prices? Might as well get a basket—heap it with dimes, quarters and dollars—put it on the counter, then paint a big sign "Help yourselves." Do that? Not much! Then see that you don't by not cutting prices. Cutting prices is eelgrass.

Do you take every cash discount, or are your assets part "water"—shallow water at that? If so, do less business—shallow water breeds eelgrass.

Do you advertise well? Do you use printers' ink in an up-to-date way? Do you talk, in circulars and press, with a pull? If you don't—watch out—you're near eelgrass.

Is your store noted for cleanness? Are your clerks "spick and span"? Are floors white—glass spotlessly clear? Is it the show place of town in your line? If your answer is "Yes"—then there's no fear of eelgrass.

Do you have up-to-date fixtures? Is your store brilliant at night—is it always inviting? All these things make for big profits. Where they grow there's no eelgrass.

And now let me ask—and this is the key of success—are your weights always "full"—do your goods equal your "brag"? Do you deliver as promised? Are you serving your fellows and taking what comes? Then, sure as you live, what will come will be good—for you're winning the race fair and square—where the water is open—and where the water is deep—and where the water is open there's no chance for eelgrass!

Western Chain Store Has New Selling Idea.

To stimulate early morning business, the Heller chain of eight grocery stores in San Diego, Cal., has inaugurated a daily special sale for each forenoon of the week, except Saturday. On a selected list of articles bought over the counter or ordered by phone before 11 o'clock, especially low prices are quoted, The plan is admittedly an experiment, which the company frankly states will be discontinued if it fails to produce the desired results.

Announcing the plan, the company says:—

> The eight Heller stores, always on the alert to eliminate every unnecessary expense, find a new way to cut the cost of doing business—a way to offer the consumers another benefit in the matter of lowered prices.
> Commencing Monday morning, each Heller store will offer special sales on groceries and foodstuffs between the hours of 7 and 11 o'clock A. M. each day (except Saturday). Nothing will be sold after 11 o'clock, except at the regular prices.
> These sales will be conducted for at least 30 days, and longer if found that the consumers are taking advantage of the savings.
> In offering certain articles each morning at less than wholesale cost, it is believed business during the morning hours can be greatly increased. If this is done, it will relieve pressure on the salesforce during the busy afternoons and the stores can be operated at less cost.

Opening specials included beet sugar at 6 cents, cane sugar at 6.3 cents, Gold Dust at 17 cents, laundry soap 8 for 25 cents, picnic hams 10 cents, standard tomatoes 4 for 25 cents.

A Freight Collecting Scheme.

Manning, S. C., Jan. 27, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Will you kindly give us some information as to the reliability of the Traffic Investigation Bureau, 401 Empire Building, Atlanta, Ga.?

This concern has been represented to us as a reliable freight adjusting bureau, but as they require an advance fee of $10, for which we are to reimburse ourselves with the first money collected for us until said collections exceed the $10, after which we continue on a 50-50 per cent. basis, we want to know about them.

Awaiting your prompt reply with interest, we beg to remain,

Very truly yours,
THE MANNING GROCERY CO., INC.

The "Traffic Investigation Bureau" appears to have no mercantile rating. We have never heard of this particular company, although we have had some experience and knowledge of other companies engaged in a similar line of business. Our impression of them, as a rule, is not favorable, particularly of those that require advance fees. There are some companies in the North that audit freight bills and collect freight overcharges for a certain percentage of the recovery, and of course a business house loses nothing, usually, by placing such accounts with firms of this sort. When all is said and done, they are simply collection agencies, with their services limited to collection from railroads. We have no reason whatever to think that they are any better than any other collection agency.

We suggest that you ask them to furnish you with several names of persons in your line of business for whom they have been successful.

Opposes the Fish Storage Bill.

New York, Feb. 3, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—H. R. 9674 is th number of a bill introduced in th House of Representatives in Wash ington by Mr. W. J. Cary, of Mil waukee, Wis., a bill to prevent th sale or transportation in interstat or foreign commerce of articles o food held in cold storage for mor than a certain time specified, etc.

This bill, amongst other items refers to fish, or the manufacture or products thereof, and limits th time for which such fish may b kept in cold storage to thre months. The bill makes no distinc tion between fresh, salted or pre served fish, but merely refers t fish. It is a well known fact tha during the hot summer month most of the salt and preserved fis and even some canned fish, must b kept in cold store so as to prever their spoiling. If the bill with th provisions now contained therei should become a law, it would spe ruin to the salt and preserved fis trade.

A similar bill was introduced i the House of Representatives i 1913 by Mr. McKellar. This un just bill was defeated at the time The Cary bill was introduced o January 21st, and on the 26th inst our Executive Committee addressed a letter to Mr. Cary pointing out t him the injustice of the provisions, and asking him to modify it so as to exempt from its provisions salted, preserved and prepared fis and meat, and it is hoped that Mr. Cary will comply with the request of the Chamber.

This bill is so far-reaching and so dangerous to the salt and preserved fish industries, not only of the United States, but also of those countries which export similar fish the United States, that the Executive Committee of this Chamber ems it of the utmost importance ask its members, and all those terested in the fish trade to immeately address the representatives their State in Washington, and r foreign members to address the presentatives of their country in ashington, setting forth energetic otests against this bill (H. R. 74) so as to prevent its adoption its present form.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The scarcity in freight room and the advancing prices in freights have caused directly and indirectly an advance in most teas during the week, principally the lower and medium grades are affected. Ceylons and Indias are up about 3 or 4 cents per pound within two weeks. Low-grade Congous are up about a cent and so are Formosas. The sole cause is the disturbance in the freight situation abroad, and prices may therefore recede again as soon as the freight situation is remedied. An active demand for the whole line is reported for tea.

Coffee.

Coffee is firmer than a week ago on account of a rather substantial advance in freight rates from Brazil. All grades of Rio and Santos are perhaps a ¼ cent higher than last week. The demand, however, is poor. Milds show no change and fair demand. Java and Mocha unchanged and quiet. Good Javas are very scarce.

Sugar.

The sugar situation has strengthened during the week and at the close all refiners are asking 6 cents for granulated. Raws are averaging 4.89 cents. The outlook seems rather firm, as the consumptive demand is always dull at this season, and if prices can be held now, it would seem as if they ought to hold from now on. There is still some beet granulated around, but none can be bought from first hands in Eastern markets.

Fish.

There has been no change in the mackerel situation during the week. Prices are firm and steadily maintained. This applies to Irish mackerel as well as Norway. Cod, hake and haddock are selling fairly at unchanged prices. Salmon is active for the season at steady to firm prices. Domestic sardines are unchanged, at the recently reported advance. Demand quiet. Foreign sardines all scarce and firm. Generally speaking, Norway mackerel are $10 per barrel above normal.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are unchanged on last week's basis. The situation still very firm. Tomatoes are still being taken to a certain extent. Spot corn is wanted and so is future corn. Peas are sluggish, both spot and future, although some few futures have been sold. Apples are unchanged and quiet. California canned goods quiet at ruling prices. Small Eastern staple canned goods are unchanged and without incident, except some spinach, which seems to be steadily growing firmer.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose shows no change for the week, but an advance is expected owing to the advance in corn. Sugar syrup unchanged and quiet. Compound syrup unchanged and fairly active. Molasses unchanged and in seasonable demand.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are dull, without change in price, either in primary or secondary markets. Peaches and apricots are unchanged and in moderate demand. Raisins moving out every day at unchanged prices. Currants and other dried fruits quiet, without incident.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are perhaps a shade lower under last week, but not much. The situation is firm and high. Marrows are unchanged on the same basis as a week ago. Demand quiet. California limas are being shaded slightly, but not by every holder; demand fair. Green and Scotch peas unchanged and dull.

Butter.

The consumptive demand for butter is normal for the season. Stocks in storage are about what they were a year ago, but prices are about 15 points lower now. The market is healthy throughout on the present basis. I

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm on account light stocks and prices have ad- nced about 1 cent per pound during e week. There is a good consumptive mand and a good export demand, and e entire situation is healthy, with no portant change in sight.

Provisions.

Everything in smoked meats is dull d unchanged, with a light consump- e demand. Both pure and compound d are steady and unchanged. Dried ef, barreled pork and canned meats e very dull, without change in price.

DIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Rice.

The activity noted last week contin- s. Although buyers are somewhat h to pay the prices exacted, a de- ee of confidence is displayed, and ite liberal purchases have been made r local and out-of-town account. Re- pts are moderate and all grades are vancing. Screenings are in light pply, and the market is practically re of stock which can be had at less an 4 cents. Fancy styles are also arce, the bulk of offerings being ue Rose and medium to choice qual- Honduras, which at the moment are ered at prices below parity of pro- cing markets.

Advices from the South along the lantic coast note a slackening de- nd. Carolinas moving out slowly.

At New Orleans, owing to the ac- e demand from foreign countries, e to the inability to secure foreign es, all low grades, including broken es, have been bought up and very tle remain in millers' hands. The ndition of the market on these grades almost panicky, as evidenced by the t that these grades are advancing arply. This condition has had the ect of advancing the Blue Rose mar- t and all grades are up a full ¼ cent. In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, xas and Arkansas, the mills report increased inquiry from all sources d a better feeling is extant. Farmers holding rough rice firmer than ever d the fancy grades are up 50 cents barrel.

The buying of tomatoes last week r shipment out of the 1916 pack was ain quite active, and the orders came om a larger number of jobbers than re booked in the week previous. ie majority of the orders was for lots say, one to four carloads, but there re a number that exceeded the lat- figure, and they included all sizes of s. The confidence of the buyers in e outlook for the business is shown their liberal orders, and, unless the expected happens, it is reasonable to lieve that we are now seeing the nimum prices for 1916. Wherever Clothes Are Washed!

Women wash clothes to get them clean, so they don't like to use dirty starch. Wherever clothes are washed, in city or suburb, in town or on the farm, women appreciate ARGO STARCH because it is CLEAN starch.

Not only will ARGO STARCH, in the neat 5-cent cartons, please your customers, but it is easiest and best for you to handle. The carton is convenient; it saves the work of scooping and weighing bulk starch; it saves the cost of bags and twine; it saves TIME.

ARGO STARCH MAKES A SPLENDID DISPLAY

A neat pile of ARGO STARCH in your window, or on your counter, is sure to catch the eyes of customers and increase your sales. Always have ARGO STARCH where it can be seen, and it will sell itself. Bulk starch only sells if customers remember they want to buy it; ARGO STARCH acts as a reminder, an advantage of package goods which the live merchant quickly appreciates.

the reports in the last three or fo issues. Important developments are a ticipated at the big annual conventi of the National Association of Canne Brokers, Machinery and Supply M to be held at Louisville during the we of February 7th.

Favorable weather conditions f shipping goods to points north, ea and South helped the market for sp tomatoes. The temperature on one da for instance, was as high as 71 degre which is within a few degrees of o average summer heat. There was advance in the prices, however, exce for a few brands which usually co mand higher prices than other go brands not so well known in the trad

In the other lines of canned veg tables sweet potatoes, cut stringle beans, spinach and corn were in fa demand, but the inquiry for the oth articles were negligible. A very inte esting and important state of thin exists concerning the coming crop stringless beans, namely, last year t seed of that variety of beans sold $4.50 per bushel, rising to $5, with 1 per cent. delivery. To-day this se ranges from $12.50 to $13 per bush with only 50 per cent. delivery gua anteed. The farmers are unwilling pay this large advance, and those ca ners who have a high reputation f their brands of whole stringless a cut stringless beans are obliged to su ply their growers with the seed, at t present high prices, and take t chances of getting good results fro the crop next season. Spot stringle beans bought now to carry over in next season appear to be advisabl These remarks do not apply to the o dinary variety of string beans, whic may or may not be plentiful enoug next spring.

January is always a dull month this market for canned fruits, and th month is no exception. Pears are little bit more active than the oth items, but outside of the small assorte orders coming in daily the market dull and uninteresting.

Cove oysters continue to be firm to prices, though inactive this week, e cept for those brands which have t call.

Spices.

The market has been fairly activ during the week. Considerable spec lative business has been done. Th freight situation is still very much u settled, and further advances in rat are predicted for this month.

Pepper.—The stocks here are ver limited. Recent arrivals, passed by th Government, that can be shipped wit out any restriction, are bringing hig prices. White peppers are a little ea ier during the week, due to fresh a rivals on recent steamers.

Red Peppers.—In very fair demand season considered, at firm to stead prices.

Cloves.—There have been some ver heavy arrivals during the week. It reported several thousand bales hav come in from European ports. Sam have been sold against old contracts an the market has not weakened in a way. In fact, futures are steady an somewhat firmer.

Pimento.—Only in fair demand a generally unchanged prices.

Mace.—All grades in active trade d mand at higher values. Prices in th East are much above prices in effe here.

Nutmegs.—Slowly but steadily ad vancing. Spot stocks here are th smallest in years. Higher prices ca be looked for.

Cassias.—The market is short o stock and very high prices are likel to result.

Gingers.—Spot stocks of all grade are small and in the hands of a fe

ers. The present situation as we t points to high prices.
piocas.—In fair demand at steady generally unchanged prices.
prikas.—Spanish grades in fair de- l at firm prices. The Hungarian ty is still out of stock.
eds, Herbs, Etc.—Caraway and y are firm and in very steady in- . Mustard seed is slightly firmer higher. Celery seed now beginning ove more freely. This article is to be high over the spring and ner months. Sweet herbs all in demand at generally unchanged s.

Government Tells Rice Growers Its Crop Estimate Was Not Excessive.

The Secretary of Agriculture has declined the request of the Southern Rice Growers' Association for a recanvass of the Department's estimate of the rice crop of 1915 on the ground that the estimate, published on December 15th, is accurate and that the association has not furnished any evidence in support of its contention that it was 10 per cent. too high. In a letter to the president of the Association, Mr. W. B. Dunlap, the Secretary points out that the Department's estimate was in pounds and the association's in bags, and that when the increased weight of the bags this year is taken into consideration, the difference between the Department's estimate and that of the association is not 10 per cent., but less than 4. The association's charge, the Secretary says, appears to be based on the assumption that a bag of rice contains 180 pounds. Formerly this was approximately true of the average bag. Now, however, heavier varieties are more extensively grown and the conditions last season also tended to increase the weight of the rice. Careful investigations indicate that 191 pounds is a conservative estimate of the weight of the average bag to-day. This fact alone accounts for the greater part of the difference between the estimates of the Department and the association.

AMONG THE TRADE.

The firm of Comly, Flanigen & Co., wholesale grocers, has been reorganized, Robert Comly, John H. Lippincott and William S. Bonsall, being the partners. The death of William A. Flanigen last April made reorganization necessary when the old partnership expired. The canned goods commission firm of Comly & Flanigen has also been similarly reorganized.

That is one reason why Jell-O is so popular with your customers.

Another reason, which is particularly interesting to every grocer, is that the Jell-O quality is so high that it is good enough for "gilt-edge" trade and its cost so low that very economical customers buy it regularly.

Lowest Prices

The merchant who would prosper most nowadays gets posted on motor truck efficiency. The firm that doggedly sticks to the old four-hoof hay-motor methods of hauling and delivery, gradually lags behind the alert competitor. This has happened in many places. Before it happens to you stop and reflect.

Write to us for a lot of sound information, facts, figures, records, etc., that will post you on International Motor Truck service. The International has passed all others in sales and popularity. That is no vague statement—the figures prove what we say. In over 200 lines of business the International is replacing horses.

International Motor Trucks will do more for you than horses and wagons can. When you are posted you will choose one of the following—Model MA, 1000-pound capacity, $600; Model M, 1000-pound capacity, $710; Model E, 1500-pound capacity, $950; or Model F, 2000-pound capacity, $1500. Ask Your Jobber

F. G. VOGT & SONS, Incorporated
30th and Race Streets, Philadelphia

Here's a Puzzle.

I'll be goldarned if I can see why every time anybody wants to show a picture of a grocer, or show him on the stage or something, they have to make him look like a cross between a hodcarrier and a bartender.

I went to a show the other night where one of the acts was in a grocery store. They had the store fixed up pretty good—most of it was painted scenery, but the grocer himself—gee whiz, I wish you could have seen him! He was supposed to look like a regular grocer.

He looked like a burglar, and not even a burglar with brains.

And he couldn't talk five minutes without making six mistakes in grammar.

A regular roughneck without any learning or manners or anything but a loud voice and a bald head.

It made me mad. For two cents I'd have got up and made a few well-chosen remarks. But I had my wife with me and I knew by certain things that happened sometimes before when I butted in to what was none of my business that if I did I'd get my throat cut when we got out. I don't like to get my throat cut—it ain't becoming. So I kept shut.

I'll bet that in my time I've seen a million grocers. But never yet have I seen one that looked and acted like that.

Why that fellow—he wouldn't be let into any grocers' association in the United States! They'd look at him once and then blackball him.

I say to you, it isn't fair. It's going on all the time, and it just keeps the idea in people's minds that the grocer ain't much different from the fellow that drives the garbage wagon.

Another thing that riled me about that show. In the grocery store scene in the second act they had the grocer doing a lot of stunts like putting his fat thumb on the scale and making six ounces look like four pounds. Funny! Sure—funny as a crutch! I tell you, if I'd been alone I'd have been in that with a good stiff kick as sure as you're alive!

I often wondered how a grocer feels looking at that sort of guff. I never heard but one say, and he felt just as I do about it. He was a choir leader in the Presbyterian Church and on the school board. He could stand up anywhere—that fellow.

I saw in the paper last month where a grocers' association out West made a kick about a moving picture that made a fling at the grocery business. Showed some short weight stunt or something. They ought to do it all the time, then maybe it would stop.

Why even the darkies kick when a show comes along that don't treat 'em right. There was one in Philadelphia not long ago. They went to the Mayor and raised an awful stew about it. Seems to me I saw too where some Irishmen did the same thing over another show. But the grocers don't do it once where they ought to do it a dozen times.

For the life of me, I ain't ever been able to see anything rough neck about the grocery business. Why is it that people sort of link bad grammar with the grocery business? They don't do it with the hardware business or the clothing business or the dry goods business. And yet it takes a blamed sight more brains to make a go of the grocery business nowadays than it does the others. That's as true as gospel, ain't it? The chap that can drop down in Philadelphia or in a lot of other towns to-day, in a nest of chain stores, and open a grocery store and make money out of it, is a plumb king and he can eat at my table any time he wants to bring his own lemons and sugar. He's got the stuff and he ain't any rough neck.

What I'd like to see come is the time when the papers would print little items like this:—

Mrs. P. Beverly Hamfat, the well-known society queen, will give one of her celebrated receptions to-night in her palatial mansion on Poohpooh avenue. The occasion is expected to be especially choice, for there will be several notables present. Among them are Count Whiskers, of Russia, and Mr. P. Harry Lemon, the well-know grocer.

But we won't get there as long we're seeing shows like I saw week.

Selling Talks With Clerks

Grade Your Eggs.—Not for freshness, but for size. Two prices may be put on the same crate of eggs with just as much fairness as though you were grading apples or sweet potatoes or lemons, for that matter. It's simply good merchandising and you are to be candid with your customer when the question of difference is asked.

You have noticed that the same line or mark of cheese will vary in quality. When your tryer shows the rich, creamy, well-matured effect you are perfectly justified in marking it up. It's poor business to sell certain things for so much just because they were bought to sell for so much.

That's Where Judgment Comes In.—And it's the doing of such things and making a study of your business that makes you a better man. If there is one thing more than another that gets on the nerves of a progressive employer it's to have a responsible clerk do exactly as he is told. No more. No less. A good machine will do that. A good hod carrier will do it—sometimes. But a young man with brains and ambition must go beyond first instructions. You must begin right away to think out an improvement on the thing. Application will do it. That's what Edison's fellows are hired for. They're improvers on the thoughts of the "Governor."

Train Him Along.—We came ac a pargaraph in a trade paper the o day which read something like th "If you have a clerk in your emp ment that is neat and clean in app ance and has a pleasant smile, but is not over bright, train him along, don't let him go."

Very good advice, because it put sonality above cleverness. Do you k why? Because there is every p ability of developing cleverness, w changing personality is too inscrut for mere man, being very wisely ranged before salesmanship got start.

No. 349.—When You Buy a Business and Find It Isn't Doing What the Seller Claims.

A New York correspondent submits the following case regarding the status of the parties as to a certain phase of the sale of a business:

> About three months ago we purchased the above business from the founders. We continue to do business under the same name. The persons from whom we bought were really not the founders, who are dead, but the founders' sons and grandsons. It is a highly respectable business and perhaps for that reason we did not investigate as carefully as we should do. It was stated to us that the business was doing about $1,000 per week retail, when we bought it. The books were open to us, and we examined them to some extent, but not closely, because we had confidence in the firm and its reputation. It appears now as if the statement of $1,000 per week was untrue. We have been in the store for twelve weeks, and at no time has it done anywhere near that much. Our first week's receipts were $695, our second $724, our third $756, our fourth $586, and so on, until the twelfth week, when the receipts were a trifle over $800. We called this to the attention of the old firm, and they said wait until the year was up and see if the business would not average $1,000 per week. We have no reason to expect any increase at other seasons of the year, however, and are coming to believe that we have been swindled. The business is undoubtedly a good one, but since we paid $1,500 for good will, we feel that we have not been dealt fairly with. The price of the business was $6,500, of which we paid $5,000 and gave our note for $1,500, payable in four months. What is our legal status? Have we any remedy for having been told the business did $1,000 when it has not done more than $800, and sometimes is below $600?

Cases like this are constantly arising in every State of the Union. In my own practice I am getting them all the time.

I shall say to this correspondent—though I wish I could have said it to him earlier—what I invariably say to every client who comes to me when he is contemplating buying a business: Never take the word of the seller of any business as to what it is doing. If the deal is sufficiently important, put a certified public accountant on it with instructions to go clear to the bottom and prepare a statement covering everything—stock on hand, amount of gross business, and particularly net profits. It is astounding how many men about to buy a business lay down their money without any real data about the net profits. The gross business of itself means nothing. It is perfectly easy to build up a tremendous gross business in a week, simply by cutting prices below cost. But who would want to buy such a business? It is really a liability rather than an asset.

If the deal is too small for a certified accountant, put a good sharp bookkeeper on it, or if you are sufficiently experienced, get into it yourself. Before you pay down a penny, have the figures, gotten by your own investigation.

One reason this is important is that if you take the buyer's word, or, depending on his word, make but slight investigation for yourself, and after buying the business, find like the above correspondent that it does nowhere near what you expected it to, you will find it almost impossible to prove in court that the business did not do what the buyer said it did.

It is the law everywhere that the buyer of a business cannot prove what the business did before he got it, by figures showing what it did after he got it. That has been tried many times, and it always fails. For instance, the correspondent bought a business said to be doing $1,000 per week. It does for him about $600 to $800, which he argues with some force, is pretty good evidence that it did no more for the seller. But the law says it is no evidence at all, for there are differing factors present, such as possible differences in methods of salesmanship, advertising and so on, which might account for the difference. Therefore the buyer is deprived at the outset of what he considers his strongest evidence. The only way he can make his proof is by producing the seller's books—which have probably been made way with long before—or some of the old employees. Sometimes he can get some of the employees to give this testimony, but oftener he cannot.

There is a Massachusetts case which lawyers who have to go to court with a case like this are fond of citing—a case between two Greeks. One sold out to the other on the statement that he was doing $150 per week. The buyer b and paid largely in notes. Aft got in he found that the store not doing $150 a week, and h fused to pay the notes on ground of fraud. At the tri tried to show what the store done for him—much under $1 as evidence of what it done b but the court ruled it out, an buyer, though he really may been grievously defrauded, wa without any legal evidence a There was accordingly a v against him. This will always pen when you have no eviden fraud except that the busines have bought did less for you the seller said it did for him

The only way to protect yo against this is to get the fi first.

I will say in closing that th nothing in the suggestion o seller of the above business th buyer should wait a year to it does $1,000 a week, unles business has heavy seasons have not yet come. The stat was $1,000 per week, not $5

LOOKABILL'S PRINTING HOUSE, ROANOKE, VA.

This circular ought to have gotten some orders. It has one quality that in my judgment makes for good advertising—it concentrates on a few things. I have often discussed the tendency to cover too much ground in an advertisement. I believe there is nothing that oftener kills results. I think this circular is open to improvement, however. You have evidently made some advance announcement about the oat meal advertisement. To connect up the advertisement with the announcement, I should have used a headline something like "Well, Here It Is." There is no point or force in "Good Morning." Why wouldn't it have been a good idea to tell what kind of oat meal this is? Nothing is said about the quality except "we guarantee this to be as good as any oat meal on the market." I should have said more than this about the quality. I should have given the name of the manufacturer and told how his goods were recognized as among the best of the land, and so on.

What kind of syrup is this? Is it sugar syrup, or corn syrup, or a mixture of both? You detract very much from the strength of your bargain when you fail to say. "No. 2 Corn Syrup" looks like some vagrant, nameless brand of goods that ought to sell cheap because it is cheap. The name of the b should have been given at with something about how that brand is.

* * *

The same criticism appli "Breakfast Bacon." Whose b is it? Even if people don't k the brands of bacon as well as know oat meal or syrup, the na of the brand or the maker source of strength. To say is the celebrated Smith bacon," if the person you say it to h heard of Smith in connection bacon, doubles the strength o offering. This is part of the chology of advertising, but it i in the least a fine spun theory this very thing and this alone make all the difference betwee ders and no orders.

The "Amended" Stevens Bill is a Bra New Measure

This Paper's Criticism That Clean-up Sales Would Impossible Under Original Bill is Answered by a Clause Providing for Such Sales. Discounts in Quan Also Allowed For. Text of New Bill.

It was briefly announced last week that the Stevens bill, which seeks to give the manufacturer of trade-marked articles the right to fix the retail price, had been amended. This paper has obtained a copy of the amended bill, and it proves to be an entirely new measure, with several new and quite important features. The full text of the new bill follows:—

offer, and that such damaged, deteriorated or soiled article shall thereafter only be offered for sale by such dealer with prominent notice to the purchaser that such article is damaged, deteriorated or soiled and that the price thereof is reduced because of such damage.

Sec. 2. That the provisions of this Act shall not apply in cases of sales of such article or articles of commerce to the United States, or in cases of sales of such article to any State or public library, or to any society or institution incorporated or established solely for religious, philosophical, educational medical, scientific or literary purposes, made in good faith for use thereof by such society or institution.

The main change remedies a matter which this paper urged was one of the chief defects of the bill—the fact that under the original bill a retailer desiring to close out odds and ends of stock at a price could not do without the manufacturer's consent. Section 1, clause c the new bill gives him that right but within sharp limitations.

Another change allows discounts to be given for larger quantities.

Mixed Flour Manufacturers Strive to Fight Against Tax.

Members of the American Manufacturers' Association of Products from Corn have started a campaign to relieve "mixed flours" of the "tax and many burdensome restrictions now in force" under the Federal law. The association, which grinds about 56,000,000 bushels of corn annually includes the Corn Products Co., the Douglas Co. of Cedar Rapids, Iowa; the Clinton Sugar Refining Co., of Clinton, Iowa; J. C. Hubinger Brothers Co., of Keokuk, Iowa; the Huron Milling Co., of Harbor Beach, Mich.; the United Starch and Refining Co., of Edinburg, Ind., and Piel Brothers Starch Co., of Indianapolis. In 1898 Congress passed a bill taxing certain mixed flours, those of wheat and corn, 4 cents a barrel and laying an occupation tax of $1 a year. This act, the corn interests say, gives wheat millers a virtual monopoly in the manufacture of bread-making flour. Makers of corn products are now behind a bill, to be sponsored in the House by Mr. Rainey, of Illinois, and in the Senate by Mr. Cummins, of Iowa, to relieve mixed flour of taxation, with the provision that all mixed flours shall carry a label stating the contents and their proportions. In support of the contention that honest labeling is the only thing which justice requires for mixed flours, the corn people speak as follows:—

It would seem quite superfluous to defend the wholesomeness of mixed flour. There is no magic in food chemistry; by no strange form of necromancy can the flour miller produce a vicious compound by the simple process of mixing wholesome corn products with wholesome wheat products. The housewife has done this very thing from time immemorial, as has the commercial baker.

Packer of Meats and Other Canned Goods is Liable if His Goods Injure Consumers

Pennsylvania Supreme Court Decides This in Case Brought by Woman Whose Husband Died After Eating Diseased Pork. Packer Liable Even Though His Products Pass Through Grocers' Hands.

The Pennsylvania Supreme Court has just decided a most important case, involving the legal liability of a packer of meats, when a consumer buys a tin of his brand from a grocer and is poisoned by it. The court held that the packer is responsible, and upheld a verdict of $3,000 damages.

The plaintiff in the case was an Italian woman who lives in Luzerne County, Pa., and the defendant was a large Western packer. The meat involved was pork. The packer killed and packed it in Missouri and shipped it to its branch house in Luzerne County. A retailer bought it from the branch house and sold it to the plaintiff. The pork bore the regular Government stamp showing Government inspection. The plaintiff got it in the original package, and her whole family became ill after eating it. Her husband died as the result. Chemical analysis showed trichinosis, a disease from which pork often suffers.

Suit was brought against the packer on the theory that he had packed the pork and should have inspected it; that if he had inspected it he would have found trichinosis germs in it; therefore he was negligent. The packer defended on the ground that there was no evidence that he had been negligent in any way; that the Government inspection relieved him from the necessity of making any.

The jury found a verdict for $3,000 and the packer appealed. The Supreme Court decided every question against him, although one justice dissented. The opinion lays down the rule that anybody who packs a food product in packages is bound to inspect it to see that it is fit for human consumption, and that the Government inspection of meats and meat products does not relieve the packer from making his own inspection.

The following is from the opinion:—

> The sale in this case was not made by defendant to plaintiff directly, but indirectly through Louis Octocavani, a dealer, though the testimony as to that is not clear. But assuming that Otocavani who ordered the meat was a dealer, the first question to be considered is whether there was an implied warranty by defendant, that the meat sold to the dealer was free from disease, wholesome and fit to eat, and whether this warranty extended to the consumer after the meat had passed through the dealer's hands.
> The general rule is that where the sale of articles of food is for immediate consumption, there is an implied warranty that the food is wholesome and fit for the purpose intended, irrespective of the seller's knowledge of disease or defects therein: 35 Cyc. 407 and cases cited.
> The contention that the warranty did not extend to subsequent purchasers after the meat passed through the hands of middlemen cannot be sustained. The case of Ketterer vs. Armour & Co., 200 Fed. Repr. 322, is directly in point, that being a case of sale of pork infected with trichinæ. It was there said by Circuit Judge Noyes, at page 322, "The contention of the defendant is that a manufacturer who deals with the middleman and not directly with the consumer owes the latter no duty whatever except the duty owing to all men to refrain from knowingly and wilfully inflicting injury. And as wilful injury is hardly conceivable, the claim comes down to this, that a producer of meats can take no steps to detect poisonous parasites in his products, although the danger of their presence is well known and can be guarded against, and yet may sell such products with impunity so far as the demands of poisoned consumers are concerned. This contention is based upon the theory that so long as the manufacturer sells only to the dealer or middleman, he is a stranger to the consumer; there is no contractual relationship to base a duty upon. It is said that the dealer may sue the manufacturer and the consumer may sue the dealer, but that the consumer cannot sue the manufacturer. In other words, if the claim be well founded the middleman has an effective remedy, but he is not injured. The consumer is injured, but he cannot look to the wrongdoer and must sue the local dealer, who is likely to be irresponsible and is certainly free from fault.
> And this contention has support in authority. It is unquestionably the rule in the case of many manufactured articles where the consequences of negligent manufacture cannot be followed down to their final results. Thus, as is pointed out in one of the cases, a careless manufacturer of iron could not be held responsible for the destruction of a steamer from the bursting of a boiler, into the construction of which his imperfect material, after passing through many hands, had gone. In such cases, and in others less clear, it is said that public policy requires that the remedy for negligence should not be pressed to an impracticable extreme. But I am wholly unable to apply this rule in the present case; much more to apply it in the name of public policy. Public policy regards the public good and I am yet to be convinced that the public welfare will be promoted by holding that producers and manufacturers owe no duty to consumers to guard against diseased and poisonous meats and provisions except in those isolated cases where they happen to sell directly to them.
> The remedies of injured consumers ought not to be made to depend upon the intricacies of the law of sales. The obligation of the manufacturer should not be based alone upon privity of contract. It should rest, as was once said, upon "the demands of social justice." The producer should be held responsible for the results of negligent acts which he can readily foresee. There is no analogy between the case where defective material, after passing through many hands, produces not to-be-looked-for ill effects. The iron manufacturer who fails to inspect a piece of iron cannot foresee that it will be used in a boiler and cause a ship to sink. But the meat packer who fails to inspect his products for poisonous parasite or ingredients, knows that poison will poison, and that the persons to be poisoned through his neglect will be those who eat his products, and that no one else. The natural, probable and almost inevitable result of his negligence will be injury to the consumer and, in my opinion, every consideration of law and public policy requires that the consumer should have a remedy.
> To the same effect is Meshbesher vs. Channellene Oil Co., 107 Minn. 104, where the manufacturer was held liable to the consumer for impure oil purchased by the latter from a retail grocer.
> The same rule was applied by this court in Elkins, Bly & Co. vs. McKean, 79 Pa. 493, to the sale of oil. In that case it was said by Mr. Chief Justice Agnew, page 502, "The substance of that point is, that after the oil had passed from the defendants in large quantities to Arbuckle & Co., and from them in smaller quantities to Caskey, and from Caskey to Steel Short and Hart, who sold the lampful to McKean, there can be no recovery. The argument in support of this point is founded upon the alleged successive intervening liabilities of the persons through whose hands the oil had passed. But this proposition is unsound as a legal defense. The number of hands through which the oil had passed might furnish a strong argument on the question of identity, and the guilty knowledge of Elkins, Bly & Co. as to this particular oil, but could not constitute a legal bar to recovery, if the identity of the oil and the guilty knowledge were made clear.
> These authorities effectively dispose of this question. It is contended by defendant, however, that since the sale was made in the original package, used in interstate shipment, the transaction was exclusively within the Federal statutes relating to the inspection and sale and transportation of meat, and neither the common law doctrine of implied warranty nor the Pennsylvania statute above referred to, nor other Pennsylvania statute laws forbidding the sale of adulterated food applies, and as defendant had fully complied with the Federal Inspection Laws, the lower court was right in entering judgment for defendant.
> Under the Federal meat and food acts and the rules of the Department, the packer is forbidden to make an inspection prior to the Government's inspection, in the manner in which such inspection is made, but there is nothing to indicate that a subsequent inspection is forbidden or could not be made by the packer. Defendant made no pretence of showing such independent inspection or examination, but relies upon the argument, that no such inspection was necessary and that its duty to the consumer was fulfilled by the Government inspection.
> We agree with the reasoning of above cases and hold that the Federal statutes providing for meat inspection by Government officers, do not relieve the packer from liability for damages where he has made no inspection nor taken any steps to ascertain for himself whether the meat sold by him is fit for food. The common law duty to sell only wholesome food still remains and the burden of discharging this duty has not been shifted to Government inspectors. The jury having found that the death of plaintiff's husband was the result of eating meat packed by defendant which was affected by a disease which the evidence showed was discoverable by proper inspection, the burden was on defendant to show fulfillment of its duty which burden was not met by merely proving inspection by the United States Government inspectors.
> Under the foregoing principles, governing the sale of articles of food, a prima facie case is made out by proof that the meat sold by defendant was diseased and caused the death of plaintiff's husband. It was not necessary to go farther and prove defendant knew the food was unwholesome. Defendant's duty was absolute: 35 Cyc. 407; Wiedeman vs. Keller, supra; Meshbesher vs. Channellene Oil Co., supra. It was bound to know that the meat was unwholesome and unfit for food and this duty was not performed by merely showing an inspection and approval by United States Government inspectors.

There are several decisions in similar cases where the retailer, instead of the packer, was sued, that the retailer was not responsible unless he gave a specific warranty of his own. This because the goods were packed and sealed by some body else and usually he could not know the contents.

More About the Cream of Rice Co.

The Cream of Rice Co., which was a stock-selling scheme discussed a week or two ago, seems not to amount to much as yet. Information secured during the week is that its headquarters are at 1223 W. Madison street, Chicago and that it is composed of H. D. Stewart, T. C. Fredrich, F. O. Balch and E. F. Balch, of Davenport, Iowa. Outside of an apparent investment of somewhat over $1,000 the concern seems to have no particular resources.

Continuing Food Guarantee is Good icago Manufacturing Concern Gave a Jobber a Guarantee That All Goods Sold Subsequent to Its Date Would Comply With the Law. Goods Proved Bad and on Prosecution Being Begun Against the Manufacturer, He Pleads That His Own Guarantee is Worthless. Court Holds Otherwise.

ial Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

hicago, Ill., February 8, 1916.

n interesting and highly im-tant pure food decision has just n handed down by the United tes District Court for the thern District of Illinois. The of it is that a food guarantee ch provides that all goods sold sequent to the date of it shall be adulterated or misbranded, legal guarantee.

Several months ago Glaser, hn & Co., a Chicago manufac-ng concern, sold Steele-Wedeles o., wholesale grocers, a quantity "Herald Brand" preserves. eral years before that the ser-Kohn concern had given the owing blanket guarantee:—

teele-Wedeles Co., City.

Gentlemen:—Replying to your fa-r 10th inst., would say we here-guarantee that all goods as fur-shed you hereafter will comply ith the Food and Drugs Act of ne 30, 1906, with the understand-g, however, that if we at any time se labels or packages furnished by ou or gotten up as per your in-ructions, we shall not be respon-ble for the form or wording of e same, but only guarantee that oods covered by same are not adul-rated. It is expressly understood at the above shall hold good un-notice of revocation be given in riting. Yours truly,

GLASER, KOHN & Co.,
G. D. Glaser, Pres.

ome of the preserves were nd in violation of the Federal od and Drugs Act, and the Gov-rnment communicated with Steele-Wdeles & Co. about it. They wed their guarantee, and the vernment then prosecuted Glaser, hn & Co. The latter defended the remarkable ground that their guarantee was no good. The rt, however, held otherwise in following language:—

Section 9 of the act approved ne 30, 1906, reads as follows, viz: Sec. 9. That no dealer shall be osecuted under the provisions of is act when he can establish a uaranty signed by the wholesaler, bber, manufacturer or other party siding in the United States, from hom he purchased such articles, to e effect that the same is not adul-rated or misbranded within the eaning of this act, designating it. id guaranty, to afford protection, all contain the name and address of the party or parties making the sale of such articles to such dealer, and in such cases said party or parties shall be amenable to the prosecutions, fines and other penalties which would attach, in due course, to the dealer under the provisions of this act.

It will be seen that this section does not, in terms, seem to comprehend a general continuing guaranty, but seems to apply to the specified articles contemplated at the time. Such, indeed, is plaintiff in error's contention. That construction, however, is narrow and not in accord with the spirit of the act, which should be construed in the light of its purpose. This purpose the court, in United States vs. Antikamnia Co., 231 U. S., 654-665, declares "is to secure the purity of food and drugs and to inform purchasers of what they are buying. Its provisions are directed to that purpose and must be construed to effect it." As between a dealer to whom the purity of the goods is guaranteed and the manufacturer who has the better opportunity of ascertaining the facts, the act aims to throw the ultimate responsibility on the latter and it should, therefore, be interpreted, if reasonably possible, so as to carry out this purpose to the fullest extent. In our judgment it is, therefore, not only a fair, but the most reasonable construction of the act to include within the scope of Section 9, continuing guaranties as well as those given at the time of the sale and in reference to specific goods. The belated position of plaintiff in error as to the meaning of the statute with regard to a continuing guaranty comes to us undermined with its earlier construction contained in the letter wherein it says "we hereby guarantee that all goods as furnished you hereafter will comply," etc., and "It is expressly understood that the above shall hold good until notice of revocation be given in writing." There is no reason in law for the claim that a continuing guaranty is invalid.

When by the terms of a written guaranty it appears that the parties look to a future course of dealing for an indefinite time, or a succession of credits to be given, it is to be deemed a continuing guaranty. Letters of guaranty should receive a liberal, fair and reasonable interpretation, so as to attain the object for which the instrument is designed and the purpose to which it is applied.

We are clearly of the opinion that the letter of January 15, 1907, constituted a good, valid and sufficient guaranty under the provisions of said Section 9, and that said guaranty attached to every item of sale made by plaintiff in error to defendant in error, after the sale thereof until revoked in accordance with the terms thereof, and that it furnished a basis for the filing of the information against plaintiff in error herein.

The Harvest.

One of the most interesting advertising campaigns which have appeared in years is that now being conducted by the Retail Merchants' Board of the Cleveland (Ohio) Chamber of Commerce. The newspapers are being used and a number of the advertisements which have appeared have been sent to this paper. The theme in all is the evil of carelessly returning goods. I will reproduce some of the headings and one complete advertisement. "When You Return Goods, What It Means to the Girl Behind the Counter"; "Taking It Back. A Privilege That Increases the Cost of Your Purchases"; "Returned Merchandise. Its Relation to the High Cost of Living."

The Return Privilege

An Evil Viewed From a Sanitary Standpoint

THIS is an age when sanitary precautions of all kinds are seriously agitated by women's organizations everywhere. The abuse of the privilege of having merchandise sent home on approval is a matter for reform as vital as any of those now effected.

Many articles of merchandise are now not returnable. The merchant does not want to place this same restriction upon all merchandise.

It is for the customer's own protection that the stores of Cleveland have adopted the recommendations of the Retail Merchants Board that certain merchandise be not accepted for exchange or credit. They unite in requesting the co-operation of the patrons of all the stores in putting these recommendations into effect.

The Board's recommendations will be printed in full in this paper next Monday, November 29th.

Retail Merchants Board
Cleveland Chamber of Commerce

Most of the members of the Retail Merchants' Board are department stores. They are up against the returned goods nuisance just as all department stores are. But why are they? Because they started it and competition has run away with them. Without doubt the expense of allowing returns of merchandise—the necessary bookkeeping, the delivery and recall—amount to an incredible percentage of the cost of doing business. Some of this expense the stores collect from their customers, some of it they can't collect—if they could they would not be spending money in Cleveland to stop the practice. They are simply reaping what they sowed.

A Good Aid for Increasing Canned Goods Consumption.

Mr. John R. Baines, the well-known Baltimore, Md., packer, suggested something to the National Canners' Association which if followed by packers generally would eliminate much of the uneven grading of canned goods, which constitutes one of the chief obstacles in the path of any plan to increase canned goods consumption. The following is from Mr. Baines' address on canned goods labels:—

> How, then, can we label so that the consumer can tell at a glance what the goods are? My plan is this: that every packer or distributor whose name appears on the label shall grade his own goods by printing on the label one of the following five designations:—
> My (or our) Extra Quality.
> My (or our) Extra Standard Quality.
> My (or our) Standard Quality.
> My (or our) Near Standard Quality.
> My (or our) Second Quality,
> and that no other form or change of phrase should be used. As of course it would be impossible to get every packer to agree to do this—I would advocate that the Department at Washington should issue a regulation to that effect, thus making it part of the national law, and consequently mandatory on the party whose name appears on the label.

The problem to-day is this: The National Canners' Association, I will say, spends a large sum of money educating consumers to believe that canned tomatoes are worth eating. A consumer who has been so educated goes into a grocery store and, possibly for the first time in her life, orders a can of tomatoes. There is nothing on the label to definitely inform her whether she is getting a good can of tomatoes, and as a matter of fact she gets a bad can—thin, watery, and half green. Everything that the association has accomplished is destroyed in that minute. It has actually hurt its own cause, because from then on this woman is going to be harder to get than she was in the beginning. She has been settled and confirmed in her prejudi against canned goods.

If Mr. Baines' plan was followe there would be something at lea by which the consumer could co trol her experiment. If she is t try canned tomatoes she will adm that she should try the best canne tomatoes that there are, and M Baines' label would tell her—if s looked at it. And there's the ru But if the National Canners' Ass ciation will work with the retaile in this thing, they can get many them to explain these things to co sumers.

The Alart & McGuire "Agreement."

The following is from the curre number of the "Grocers' Review the monthly pu lished by Girard Groce Co., of Philad phia:—

> The other day one of our clerks called upon the Philadelphia representative of Alart & McGuire Co. for a case of Waw Waw brand pickles, was told that while extremely sorry, he was unable to fur nish the package, as his house ha decided to supply local busin only through the jobber, and h entered into an agreement to th effect.

I can scarcely conceive that enlightened concern like Alart McGuire, doing business in Ne York, the scene of more a monopoly suits than any other m ket, could have not only made "agreement" with some jobbers n to sell a given jobber, but co boast about it afterward.

Let me advise Alart & McGu quite gratuitously, that if they h made any agreement with jobb not to sell the Girard Grocery C which by every recognized stand is also a jobber, they have viol the law and can be mulcted in l damages. So can the other par to the agreement, whoever they m be.

Worth Reading and Remembering

Show the clerk how to arrange goods on shelves, counters, and tables so they will make the best display. Give each clerk a certain section of the store to trim, and make him responsible for the way goods are displayed and kept.

Training your clerks will help them to be good salesman and accurate business men; to take more interest in your business and feel more responsible for its success.

Many times your business is judged by the conduct of your clerks. Show them how their actions outside of, as well as in, the store affect your business, their positions and futures.

Many a good clerk has been ruined by getting into bad company and developing habits his salary could not afford.

Why Buy Future Peas Now?

A well-known Western brokerage house offers the following interesting agreement as to why future peas should be bought now, in spite of the fact that the condition of the market would seem to make it a bad proposition:—

> Why buy future peas when spot peas can be bought so cheap?
> If the cost of carrying peas bought at present prices is less than you would have to pay for future peas, then you should not buy futures. But are you buying the spots? If not, you are overlooking a few things which, for convenience, we will enumerate:—
> 1. Peas in packers' hands number no more than on January 12, 1915.
> 2. Peas on hand one year ago practically all out of the packers' hands by June 1, 1915.
> 3. Consumptive demand for peas a year ago much less than now. Many people out of work then. To-day everybody working at good wages and spending freely for everything, including peas.
> 4. Acreage in peas will be reduced in 1916, not by agreement, but by the force of the lack of profits in 1915 and 1914.
> 5. The low prices made on 1915 pack peas have stimulated consumption tremendously, as jobbers and retailers have universally passed the low prices on to the consumer, who has been buying two cans at th former price of one, and using tw cans where formerly one was used

Why a Manufacturer Should Be Permitted to Fix the Retail Price of His Product

Views of Various Believers in This Doctrine Who Offer Them as Arguments for the Pending Stevens Bill.

[The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has obtained and will from time to time present a series of statements by various well-known persons who believe that the manufacturer should have the right to tell the retailer what price he must get for the manufacturer's product. All of the views which will be presented can be taken as arguments for the pending Stevens Bill, which seeks to give a manufacturer that right.—Ed.]

No. 13.—By Sol. Westerfeld, Retail Grocer, 1409 Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

In pleading for the passage of the Stevens bill we are not asking for anything new, as far as legislation is concerned.

There are a few points I should like to emphasize. In big business you have already conceded the wisdom of such laws, as in the uniform railroad tariffs and express rates, in the prohibition of the giving of rebates and other similar laws.

In small business, such as the vocation followed by me and those whom I represent, our Government has practiced the very opposite and has pronounced as restraint of trade any honest effort made by the manufacturer desiring to protect himself and his product, his customers, the dealers, and the consumer, by naming the price at which his produce should be sold.

You will recall the methods pursued by the Standard Oil Trust and the Sugar Trust and the Beef Trust and those other big menaces to the prosperity of our people.

Those large interests are constantly at war with those who interpose themselves between them and the pocketbook of the consumer; yes, at war with our Government itself.

The very method employed by these monopolies mentioned is the method of the retail octopuses, the damnable method of killing competition through price-cutting, and more the pity, our present laws rather encourage than hinder this slaughter of the innocent.

After the small dealer has been so disposed of, beware, consumer, for the insatiable appetite of these big trade pirates, who will never be satisfied with a fair compensation for any service performed.

The consumer knowing the regular price of widely advertised products, assumes that in the event of such articles being offered at a lower price, all the merchandise offered is correspondingly low. This supposition on the consumer's part is precisely the aim of the price-cutter, but nothing is further from the actual condition as it prevails.

How many times have you or your families, or your neighbors been induced to go to a cut-price store after bargains, to purchase products of known merit, at prices considerably lower than the regular price, only to be informed that the particular merchandise you wanted would only be sold, at the advertised price, if you purchased a certain amount of other goods with it?

For instance, it has come under my observation that a certain commodity, let us say sugar, is advertised at or below cost, but there is a confession of guilt in the very same advertisement when it states that this cut-price article, this sugar, may only be purchased when the consumer purchases $2 or more of other groceries, prohibiting, however, the purchase of other merchandise on which the profit is not very great to be included in the $2 purchase.

In an advertisement appearing in one of our Chicago papers last Sunday is contained among other things this: "Ten bars of Fels Naptha soap at 39 cents." That is about the cost to the dealer. It also contained the statement, however, "Ceylon or Oolong tea at 90 cents per pound." I am quite sure the profit on that was not less than 50 per cent. The concern in question can well afford to sell 10 bars of soap at 39 cents, at cost, and more than reimburse themselves on other commodities.

In the absence of a general high intelligence and full understanding of the underlying, or should I merely say lying, motives of the price-cutter, and in the presence of the gullibility of the average consumer, I can only see one remedy and that is to make it legal for the manufacturer to name the price at which he desires to have his product sold to the consumer.

I have no fear that this price will be exorbitant; competition will take care of that. Any manufacturer who hasn't a monopoly fixes the selling price of his product at his own peril. He cannot hurt anyone but himself. Self-preservation will compel him to fix a fair price—fair first to the consumer and then to the retail and wholesale merchants who handle his product. If he fixes the price too high the consumer will turn to some competitive product and the price-fixing manufacturer has driven trade away and injured no one but himself. If he fixes the price too low—and does not maintain quality—the product is not attractive to the merchants nor consumer and they turn from it to some more attractive competitive article, and again the price-fixing manufacturer has injured no one but himself.

You may depend upon it that in the promotion of his own business and indeed for the preservation of his business in the field of competition any manufacturer fixing a price must fix a fair price, fair to the user and fair to the dealer.

Any manufacturer manufacturing a good article is immediately followed by another manufacturer endeavoring to manufacture one just as good, just as cheap, or possibly a better or cheaper article, as far as it affects groceries. I can readily see that in certain lines of manufacture, with which I am not thoroughly acquainted, a monopoly may exist. It does not, however, apply to that line of business with which I am familiar.

I will say that I have prepared a list of cost of groceries to the dealer and the cost per package, the regular price at which it ordinarily is presumed to be sold, and t profit made by the dealer in case sells it at the regular price, and t percentage of profit. That list is follows:—

Article.	Dealers' cost per—	Cost per—	If sold at regular price to consumer.	Profit.	Per ce of profi
Campbell's Soup	Dozen, 90 cents	Can, 7½ cents	$0.10	$0.02½	25
Quaker Oats	Dozen, 94 cents	Package, 7.83 cents	.10	.0217	21
Kellogg's Corn Flakes	Dozen, 93 cents	Package, 7.77 cents	.10	.0233	22.
Shredded Wheat	Dozen, $1.20	Package, 10 cents	.12½	.02½	20
Cream of Wheat	Dozen, $1.50	Package, 12½ cents	.15	.02½	16⅔
Uneeda Biscuit	Dozen, 50 cents	Package, 4⅙ cents	.05	.00⅚	16⅔
Dr. Price Baking Powder	Dozen, $4 60	Package, 38⅓ cents	.50	.11⅔	23⅓
Royal Baking Powder	Dozen, $4 75	Package, 39.58 cents	.50	10.42	208.
Rumford Baking Powder	Dozen, $2.30	Package, 19.17 cents	.25	.0583	23.
American Family Soap	Case (66 cakes), $2.85	Cake, 4.32 cents	.05	.68	13.
Fels Naphtha	100 cakes, $4.00	Cake, 4 cents	.05	.01	20
Ivory Soap	100 cakes, $4 00	Cake, 4 cents	.05	.01	20

As you will observe the goo enumerated, whose names a household words all over t United States, even if sold at t highest prices asked by the sm dealer, pay but a small, if ar margin over and above the cost distribution to the consumer; the same brands, however, are the on most often advertised at cut pric it is they that make the best b to catch the unsuspecting co sumer.

Take Uneeda Biscuit, an artic of commerce well known all ov the world, all over the Unit States at least, costing at retail cents a dozen, 4⅙ cents per pac age, if sold at 5 cents per packa pays only five-sixths of a cent. J think of it. Only 16⅔ per ce profit. Even if that commod were sold at the regular pri without price-cutting, it would r pay any profit over and above t cost of distribution. Yet we fi Uneeda Biscuit advertised very fr quently at less than cost. We fi them advertised three packages 1 10 cents, or possibly two packa for 5 cents, in connection with t sale of some other big profit-payi merchandise on which the dea reimburses himself.

Inasmuch as we small dealers injured by this practice, inasm as the consumer is often misled made to pay higher than regu prices on other merchandise, in much as the manufacturer is present powerless to either prot himself, his product, the dealer consumer, we respectfully requ of your honorable body to afford of us this reasonable protection recommending the passage House bill 13305. In the words Huxley, "My experience of world is that things left to the selves do not go right."

The New York Letter

rchants' Association Opposes Bill Requiring Manufacturer's Name on Canned Goods Labels. New Association Organized to Combat Pernicious Legislation. Big Five-and-Ten Cent Store Profits.—Market Summary.

ial Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, February 11, 1916.

ıe Merchants' Association has sent ıe Congressional Committee on In- ate and Foreign Commerce a strong est against the passage of the bill iring the names of the packers on ıed goods to be placed on the label ans. This bill was recently dis- ed in the "Modern Merchant and ery World" and the opinion was essed that it was aimed chiefly at ate brands.

ıe Merchants' Association gives the owing reasons for objecting to the as it is now framed and for sug- ing that no name be required upon label except the name of the "man- turer, producer, canner, packer or ributor":—

Mr. Johnson's bill, H. R. 3,097, oposes an amendment to the Pure od and Drugs Act, which shall quire that in the case of food oducts the labels upon the pack- es shall state the name and ad- ess of the manufacturer, produc- , canner or packer of such prod- ts, and may also state the name the distributor.

VALUE OF TRADE-MARKS.

While we approve of the require- ent that the public shall be pro- cted by the presence of a respon- ble name upon the label, there are rious objections to the proposed rm. A very large part of the nned goods sold in the United tates are sold under distinctive ade-mark labels which are owned large jobbing or distributing rms—principally wholesale grocers in the principal cities. Many of ese wholesale grocers themselves erate canneries and are, therefore, ıe manufacturers of their own oducts of certain kinds. They, owever, in addition, buy large antities of other products from ıe producers. These are packed canned under careful specifica- ons as to quality and under the im- diate supervision of the wholesale stributor. They bear the label or ademark, and invariably the name id address, of such distributor, ereby affording to the public the st possible guarantee as to the ality of the articles. The value of ıe trade-mark would be greatly paired if it appeared thereon that ıe products in question were put up several different producers in- ead of actually the product of the rm whose name and guarantee it ears.

QUALITY IS PROTECTED.

The present practice tends toward aintaining a high quality of prod- t, and in any event the public is otected by the guarantee of the holesale grocer, who is invariably ır more responsible than the small nner or producer from whom the oduct is obtained.

If, therefore, the bill were so nended as to read as follows:—

"That the manufacturer, producer, nner, packer or distributor of od products must place upon the label of each package the name and address of such manufacturer, producer, canner, packer or distributor," with the omission of the proviso, the point we raise would be amply met. This would protect the public by requiring that every food product should bear the name of the person responsible for the purity of the product, which is the intent of the amendment.

We trust your committee will deem it wise to make the suggested change.

This would leave the situation as it is now.

The National Trade Assosciation, with headquarters at 18 E. Forty-first street, New York City, has been organized here, the purpose being as stated by itself: "The combatting of pernicious legislation and for the furthering of the general commercial interests of manufacturer, merchant and consumer." The officers are: President, Geo. B. Caldwell; vice-president, Percy S. Straus; treasurer, Harry B. Haines; acting secretary, Louis Barnett; directors, G. B. Caldwell, P. S. Straus, H. B. Haines, Edmund E. Wise, Jno. H. Love, Howard Brokaw, A. J. Marcuse, Geo. W. Mittun, Jason Rogers, Louis C. Page, Jno. C. McKeon, A. Meier, A. M. McCallum, Geo. W. McGeachin, Jno. H. Snowdon and Louis A. Lehmaier.

The association announces that the first bill which it will oppose is the Stevens bill, which would give the manufacturer the right to fix the retail price on any branded article.

The above list of officers and directors include retailers, wholesalers and manufacturers.

His O. K. Would Be Like the Stamp

If there was some high business judge to oversee business transactions and guarantee fair play in them, the O. K. that he would put on some specialty orders would be akin to the stamp which most representative manufacturers put on them.

What can you lose by stipulating that you will sign only orders with one of the above stamps on them? You can't lose latitude of choice, because almost all the better manufacturers use one stamp or the other. You lose nothing, while you gain the certainty that your jobber will treat the order as if it amounted to something, and your rights will be protected at every point.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change from last week. The situation is steady to firm, with freight rates still high. In fact, the rate on Ceylon-Indias is now about 6 cents per pound. No change has occurred during the week, but the situation shows a strong undertone and a good, active demand.

Coffee.

The coffee market, speaking particularly of Brazils, is tending upward and all grades of Rio and Santos are ½ cent higher than a week ago. The continued scarcity of ships to bring Brazil coffee to this country and the high freight rate are the reasons. Milds show no change. The situation is steady and demand fair. Java and Mocha unchanged and quiet.

Sugar.

The sugar market remains unchanged from a week ago, all refiners asking 6 cents for granulated and raws being quoted between 4.80 and 4.90 cents per pound. There was a dispatch from abroad during the week that England proposed to shut down on imports of sugar for various reasons connected with the war. If this is so, the market in this country will undoubtedly be affected, and some declines will result. The consumptive demand for sugar is fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

No change has occurred in glucose during the week. Compound syrup is seasonably active at ruling prices. Sugar syrup and molasses are both unchanged and high.

Fish.

Mackerel remains unchanged for the week, except that certain holders of Norways are now asking a little more money. The supply is so light that the chance is that they may get it. Mackerel is selling as well as could be expected. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and quiet. Salmon shows no change for the week; good demand for the season. Domestic sardines unchanged, steady to firm and quiet. Imported sardines all unchanged.

Canned Goods.

The tomato market is about 2½ cents weaker for the week, due entirely to apathy on the part of buyers. The statistical position is just as strong as it has been. There has been no decline in No. 2s, and if any bidding appears, the market will probably go back to where it was at least. The demand for future tomatoes still continues, although sellers are becoming more reluctant, as many of them are sold up. Corn and peas, both spot and future, are unchanged and in fairly good demand. Apples unchanged and very dull as yet. California canned goods show no change for the week, but the undertone on the coast is firmer, due to the revelation that stocks are lighter than most of the trade thought. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged and moving out regularly in a seasonable way.

Dried Fruits.

The Eastern markets are quoting lower prices on prunes than the fruit can be bought for on the coast to bring forward. This is for the reason previously reported that many of the Eastern holders are taking profits. Peaches and apricots unchanged and fairly active. Raisins unchanged and in fair demand. Currants and other dried fruits all selling to some extent without any change in conditions.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are about the same as last week, namely, $4 per bushel, in a large way. Perhaps the feeling is slightly weaker, but there is no material change either way. Marrows have shown a decline of 10 to 15 cents per bushel during the week. The fact that sales have fallen off a little on account of unfavorable weather is the main reason. California limas are perhaps a little weaker also, at least in certain holders' hands. The demand is quiet. Green and Scotch peas show no change and fair demand.

Butter.

There is a very active demand for all grades of butter, and the market is firm at an advance of about 2 cents per pound on all grades. The make of butter is light and the quality arriving is averaging fancy. The situation throughout is healthy and will probably continue for some time on about the present basis.

Eggs.

The receipts of fresh eggs are increasing to a considerable extent on account of the fact that the weather is very favorable for large production. The receipts of goods are larger than usual at this season. The consumptive demand, however, is active and is absorbing receipts on arrival. The market is clean and healthy on the present basis, but the future depends upon the weather.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm and unchanged, with a moderate consumptive demand. Owing to the heavy export demand, stocks are reported low, and the market is firm on the present basis.

Provisions.

All smoked meats are steady and unchanged, with only a moderate consumptive demand. Pure lard and compound are in very light demand at steady and unchanged prices. Barreled pork, canned meats and dried beef are all dull and in light demand.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Standard Canned Goods.

Developments of more than ordinary interest are expected at the annual convention of the National Canners' and Brokers' Association at Louisville. Tomato canners from all sections of the country will be there, and the brokers who distribute 90 per cent. of the output will meet them and go over the market situation thoroughly. A larger number than usual of the buyers for the wholesale grocers will be in attendance to gather information that will be valuable to them during the coming season, because they have found it worth their while to attend previous conventions.

Trading in future tomatoes was active again, and the orders for them came from the same sections that bought them so freely during January. In fact, the market has broadened considerably, and the outlook is favorable for continued activity during the month.

Jobbers who buy "futures" conservatively at to-day's prices, of canners whose contracts are worth par under all or any market conditions, will find themselves in position to do business on a satisfactory basis when delivery time rolls around. It is worth while to take up the subject now. We offer the same brands that you have bought with satisfaction in previous seasons, and we request your orders.

Spot tomatoes are firm, though less active this week. The quick change from summer-like weather last week to wintry temperature has its influence on the buying, doubtless, but there will be a steady demand in carlots, regardless of weather conditions, because the jobbers need the goods. They are property to own at to-day's cost.

There was a good demand this w for stringless beans because of the velopments mentioned in our last i regarding the enormous advance in cost of seed beans, which adva again this week. Spinach, sweet tatoes and corn were again fairly a during the week, but the other lines vegetables were dull. The buying corn for future delivery is beginning attract attention, and already the v fancy shoepeg variety, for which H ford County is especially noted, been nearly sold up to the limit at fr 75 to 80 cents a dozen. We have o a few carloads left of our brands sell at 75 cents, strictly fancy qual which are worth your prompt attenti

Pears were the only article in can fruits for which there was a fair mand this week. The other arti were dull and neglected, which is alw the case in this market at this time the year. They will all have their nings when the spring trade opens up

Cove oysters are likely to stiffen should this spell of freezing weat continue during February, and they worth attention now.

THOS. J. MEEHAN & Co.

Imported Fish Specialties.

The approaching Lenten season see to have had a decided stimulating eff upon the salt fish trade. Norw mackerel are moving more freely, a there seems to be a good demand the same. Herrings of all kinds, spite of the enormously high ask prices, are selling better, although o in a hand-to-mouth way. There is

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Cutting Down the Newspaper Bill.—Twenty-inch double column, twice a week is probably the average newspaper advertising of the average grocer.

If you are the fellow who plans the advertising for your store, I have a suggestion for you this week. Incidentally, please remember, that the suggestions contained in "Straight Talks" aren't theories, but real facts, worked out before they appear in these columns.

To cut down your space 50 per cent. without working from another angle might prove something of a risky proceeding. So the other "angle" is the window.

A real cost window, with life and sensation in it.

Suppose you start with your 10-cent peas and mark them 5 cents a can. "Oh," you say, "we couldn't do that; that would be too much of a sacrifice." Wait a minute.

We'll say your're cutting out $10 on you're newspaper account; you're selling your peas at cost, plus overhead charges. Would overhead charges exceed $10?

Again, which method would create the most comment. Peas in the window at 5 cents, or peas in the paper at 10 cer —$1.10 a dozen? Which would bri the most people into the store?

Manifestly there is only one answ and it's in favor of the cost windo You may call the scheme a loss if y want to, but it isn't. It's chargable advertising expense.

I do not wish you to infer that t importance of newspaper space is nored. That's the live wire that nects us with the money holders. there are other live wires whose vo may carry a greater shock, even if fitful.

You can establish a cost window th may be "read" any hour of the day night. There's another good thing connection with this. The cost sta many a customer on a brand of goo which they continue to buy later at t regular price. This has been prov time again. Be sure to limit the s —say, Friday, Saturday and Mond and another one for one day or for t other three days.

On a separate card have printed u derneath the big one, "Tuesday the pri goes back to ——," so and so.

eptionally good demand for imported lines of all kinds, particularly for wegian goods, which are getting cer every day, because new supplies not available, owing to the asking es in Norway, which are simply be- d our reach. Stocks of all kinds of orted sardines have never been as ll in the United States as they are . This also refers to other kinds of ied fish, like anchovies, of which a ment arrives here every once in a le from Sweden or Norway, and ch is readily absorbed for consump- on arrival.

e mentioned in our last report a introduced by Representative Cary ie House of Representatives, Wash- on. This bill, if passed in its pres- form, would mean ruin to the salt preserved fish trade of the United es and incidentally to the fishermen, more particularly, it would tend to ease the cost of living, because the umers would be unable to obtain salted and preserved, which is one ie most healthful and cheapest food nodities at reasonable prices all the round. We again ask all our read- o lodge a protest against the pass- of this bill with their representatives Washington, and do it quickly, be- e it is of the very highest import-

"As to The Northern Jobbing Co."

Rugby, N. D., February 1, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—What information can you give me about the Northern Jobbing Co., of Chicago? Are they a regular wholesale grocery concern?

Thanking you for the information, I remain, Yours truly,

The Northern Jobbing Co. has a fair financial standing, but so far as we can learn, it is a retail concern, not a wholesale at all.

Cheering Words Indeed.

Plainfield, N. J., Feb. 3, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Pardon my delay in answering yours of January 20th. I had the check ready, but my office was left without a bookkeeper and I was too busy to write. I did not feel like mailing you my check for a two years' subscription to your valuable paper without writing you a few kind remarks. I owe your paper that much. I can't say nothing less than I said two years ago—"the best investment that I ever made in subscribing to your paper."

No matter how much a wide-awake merchant knows about his business, he can always learn something more by reading your issue each and every week. It is a big help to me and a great guide. Your editorial writings written by a man who knows how, are splendid every week; your Legal Department is worth special praise; your market news is up to the minute; your Selling Talks with Clerks are splendid lessons for the boss as well as for the clerks. I let the clerks read them every week. Your "Stroller's" column is a real cheer after a hard day's work; in fact, your top cover is not a small lesson for anybody. I read it each week from cover to cover and it is full with good stuff.

Hoping to be with you for a half a century at least, and wishing you and yours the compliments of the season, I remain,

Yours very truly,

SOLOMON MANN.

A Premium Scheme.

Bland, Va., Jan. 27, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Will you kindly let us know if the National Novelty Import Co., St. Louis, Mo., is reliable? We made a deal with them in 1914. They were to take back all unsold goods at the end of one year from our first payment, which is now about out. We have nearly $300 worth of their goods. This is a premium deal.

Yours very truly,

F. A. CRABTREE & CO.

This concern is well rated by the mercantile agencies and financially seems all right. We have found, however, that the contracts through which these scheme concerns agree to take back unsold goods are usually worded in such a way that the buyer can get but little out of them. Send on your contract and let us look at it.

Pittsburgh Grocers Don't Want Association Insurance Plan Changed.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Feb. 11, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Pittsburgh (Pa.) Retail Grocers' Protective Union, the matter of the action of the Board of Directors of the Pennsylvania Retailers' Mutual Fire Insurance Co. in departing from the regular policy and rule of the company (established when same was organized) of charging their policy holders a cash premium of 50 per cent., or one-half the standard board rate, and adopting the change by which the full rate set by the Board of Underwriters will be charged to members of said constituent associations after July 1st, was taken up and discussed. Exceptions were taken to this change and the Executive Committee voted unanimously to express our disproval of same by instructing the secretary to write the officials of the Retailers' Mutual Fire Insurance Co. inquiring why said change has been made, for we understood that it has ever been the policy of this company since its organization to write insurance on the present basis, and as the company, according to the public statement of its secretary, has always paid all its losses promptly, was in first-class financial condition and had a surplus or reserve sufficiently able to meet any reasonable demands that might be required of it.

Also, we can learn of no demands for this change being made by any of the policy holders or different associations throughout the State, but on the contrary find most of them opposed to such a change. One of the principal organizers of this company has assured us that he is very much against this change. Now we insist that we be shown the necessity of such a change or that there is any request or sentiment among the policy holders for such a change. If this cannot be shown we desire to know by what right the Board of Directors made this change without even notifying the policy holders they contemplated such a change. Is the added revenue needed to take care of or create a salary for some of its officers or to help out on the expenses of the State organization? We believe the business of the State Association and the Retailers' Mutual should be kept separate and apart from each other and we further believe the Retailers' Mutual under its present system is able to take care of itself; its business affairs are properly conducted without unnecessary expense, etc. Further, we believe it will be detrimental to the best interests of this company to make this change and that it will not alone result in a loss of business to this company but also loss or decrease in the membersh of the State Association, and may even disrupt a number of loc associations whose members recei very little in benefits except th saving in insurance. In fact, tal the insurance feature away fro the State Association and you te down one of its corner stones.

It's all very well to say that portion will be returned at the er of the year. Can you guarant that it will and how much of i The merchant to-day is not lookir for prospects or what may be, b wants the bird in the hand. W also know that the more mon comes into our hands the mo tendency there is to spend it free in expense and otherwise, a under the present system, as w understand it, we are not inclined the belief that there will be muc of a rebate to the policy holde at the end of the year. We ther fore enter a protest against this u necessary change of policy and b lieve that most of the other assoc ations will concur with us in wh we have stated and also voice a pr test against said change.

Respectfully yours,

C. A. BELL,

Secretary Retail Grocers' Protec ive Association.

Goldenoyle, which we advertise here, is a higher-grade article than any other cooking oil you can possibly have in stock.

We know all the others and we know Goldenoyle. It is the finest grade of cooking and salad oil which has ever been put on the market. You can sell it under the most enthusiastic recommendation you can give—you cannot say too much.

One thing to say is that Professor Allyn, the widely-known Westfield, Mass., chemist, has passed Goldenoyle as conforming with the Westfield standard. Has he passed the brand you are selling?

Packed 4 doz., 7-oz. bottles; 2 doz. small cans, 21¾ oz. each and 1 doz. ½-gal. cans. On 3-case order we prepay the freight. Beautiful recipe book for retailers' customers.

Some Wife!

Here I am back again on the subject of wives, and why some of 'em ought to be choked to death.

I've got an old friend in the grocery business. Been one of my customers almost ever since I started on the road. He's about fifty-eight years old now, and in good condition in every way. Not a has-been at all.

His place is about an hour's railroad ride from Philadelphia. The chain-stores have got in there and business ain't like it was ten years ago. One or two stores have dropped out and nobody's making what they did before the chain stores came. But it ain't as bad as it might be, and my old friend was still getting along all right. Making a living for himself and his wife, anyway. They had a married son and a married daughter, both living in their own homes. Frank and his wife lived by themselves.

I know Frank's wife pretty well. I've had meals in their house a lot of times and they've treated me all right. Mrs. Frank has a fool rule that you can't spit backy juice on her parlor carpet, but I don't hold that against her—she's just queer.

She's all right, understand. She's been a good mother and she's a good wife. Nothing wrong with her at all that way. The only thing wrong with her is her judgment. Once she gets an idea in her head it sticks there until it's been put into effect, no matter how bum it is.

She got an idea about a year ago that Frank ought to go out of the grocery business. She never did like the grocery business much. She had an idea that people looked down on you if you was a grocer—she's often talked to me about it.

But that wasn't the reason she wanted him to get out. She said there wasn't any more money in the business on account of the chain stores and for the amount of work Frank was doing, he wasn't getting enough out of it.

She had a fool notion that in a little while there wasn't going to be anything but chain-stores.

"I tell you, ma'am, you're dead wrong about that," I used to say to her. "You're awful wrong about that. There's all the chance to-day for a good grocery store that there ever was. It's simply got to do business in a little different way, that's all."

We've had a lot of hot squabbles about that, but she couldn't see it. Nothing to it but that Frank must get out of the business before it fell down on top of him.

I didn't sleep with 'em of course, but I've got reason to believe that she nagged him night and day about it. Of course, "all for his own good."

And in the end she put it over. He sold his store to a couple of his clerks and got out.

The store brought him in $1,500 in cash and the clerks' note for $500. And by George that was about all he had. The business had always handed him a living, but not any more. He'd raised his family good and that little wad of coin was all the old fellow had.

I forgot to tell you, I used to say to her:—

"What would Frank go into if he did get out? He ain't a young man any more. He wouldn't have a lot of money to put into anything. What would he do?"

"Oh, I'm not afraid of that," she would say. "A man as good as Frank is could get something."

Fine piffle, that was.

Well, as I say he sold out about four months ago and he ain't got anything yet. He looked around the town for something to put his money in—something that would give him a job, too—but he ain't found it. He could have bought into a couple of things, but they were all run down. There was one real good thing he could have got into, but it took four times as much money as he had.

Then he tried to get a job without putting money in. Maybe you think it's a cinch for a 58-year-old chap to get a job. That is, a job that would give him a decent living. Why he ain't seen one thing in the whole four months. He's writing to want ads. now in the Philadelphia papers. Nothing from yet either.

And all this time he's living his capital. Taking groceries his old store and charging 'em against the $500 note. Th good for a year maybe, mean his table, but his rent and the o things have got to come f somewhere else.

Now don't anybody kick me saying this, but this is all "I t you so" stuff. I told 'em time time again what might happen, it didn't get under Mrs. Fra skin. She knew "a man as as Frank was could get so thing."

All right, he ain't got anyt yet and he's started to eat his head off.

I think she's made an awful take myself. What she ough have done was to help him pu store up so's the chain-s couldn't hurt it. Ain't that No 350.—What the Amendments to the Stevens Bill Mean.

As most readers hereof know, there has been pending in Congress for several months a bill known as the Stevens bill, after the Congressman who introduced it. The bill aimed to give to the manufacturer of trade-marked merchandise, i. e., all merchandise sold under a special brand, whether in package form or not, the right to fix the price at which it shall be resold, whether by wholesaler or retailer. The bill did not pass last session and has been reintroduced this session by a Congressman named Ayres. Therefore it is now known as the Stevens-Ayres bill. During the last few days a new bill destined to take its place has been introduced in the House by a Congressman whose name, strangely enough, is Stephens. This bill will I suppose be known as the Stephens bill.

There are three important differences between the Stevens bill and the Stephens bill, and the purpose of this article is to explain them. In all probability the Stevens bill will be allowed to die; from now on the Stephens bill will be the one pushed.

I should again emphasize the fact that no measure of more importance to the retail trade has come to the surface for a long time. If this bill passes it will in many respects completely revolutionize business.

To make what I shall say clear, I give here a brief summary of the original Stevens bill:—

Par. 1.—Makes it legal for manufacturer or producer to sell any article under a special brand, to either wholesaler or retailer, under a contract which provides the "sole, uniform" price at which it shall be resold. Provided—

Par. 2 (a).—That the manufacturer or producer who does this shall not have a monopoly or control of the class of articles to which his article belongs nor shall he make any combination with a competitor to fix prices on competitive articles.

Par. 3 (b).—The manufacturer or producer shall put a notice on his product stating the retail price he has fixed. The product shall not be resold except at that price.

Par. 4 (c).—The manufacturer or producer shall file in the Bureau of Corporations a copy of his trade-mark or brand, and a schedule stating the price he has fixed both to wholesalers and retailers. Filing fee, $10. Under the price schedule there shall be no discrimination by allowing a discount for any cause, or by granting any special concession, allowance or rebate.

Par. 5 (d).—Permitting the dealer owning a stock of any branded article which bears a fixed price notice to sell it cheaper (1) if he is retiring from business or (2) if it is damaged, but only in either case when he has first offered it to the manufacturer and the latter has refused to pay him cost price for it.

This bill has been furiously debated over the whole United States. The chief objections which have been made to it in its present form are 1, that it did not allow for any discount for large quantities. Under Paragraph 4 as above, after a manufacturer had once fixed a resale price, it was forbidden for him to grant "a discount for any cause." This would have abolished quantity prices and compelled the large buyer to pay as much per case for one hundred cases as the small buyer pays for one. It would have pleased and protected the small buyer very admirably, but naturally the large buyers were not pleased, and they have opposed the bill.

The second objection was that the bill would have prevented a retailer—or a jobber, for that matter—from cleaning out unsatisfactory stock at a price. In any business odds and ends accumulate and the best practice is to cut the price and move them out. No article with a special brand could have been treated that way under the original Stevens bill. The consent of the manufacturer was made necessary, and if that were withheld, the goods would have had to be sold at full prices if sold at all. On this account too the bill has aroused much opposition.

The object of the Stephens bill is to remedy these two defects. The first it remedies completely, but the second it only partially remedies. I have a copy of the new act before me. It is identical in many respects with the old but there are three vital differences.

(1) The original bill contained a provision requiring the manufacturer, after he had fixed a retail price, to put a notice to that effect on the product. This is missing from the new bill, and under it a manufacturer can use his own judgment as to how he notifies the trade of the fixed price. He can put a notice on the package or not just as he likes.

(2) In the section regarding the filing of the schedule of fixed prices with the Federal Trade Commission it is now provided that the prices may vary on account of grade, quality and quantity, etc. As I have explained, this was not in the original act.

(3) There is an entirely new provision which is intended to meet the objection that stock clean-ups were prevented by the original act. Paragraph c of Section 1 of the new bill provides that the price-fixing contract may arrange for "seasonal disposal sales" twice each year, but only by retailers. At these sales a retailer can cut prices provided he has first tried to get the manufacturer to take the goods off his hands at cost. If the manufacturer when offered the goods, refuses them, then the retailer, after thirty days, can make the price whatever he likes. Nothing is said about how long the "seasonal disposal sales" may last.

Outside of the three points noted above, the new bill is identical with the old. My judgment is that it is much more likely to pass than the original bill was, but that it will probably have to be further amended before it meets the v considerable opposition which developed. As to the "seasonal posal sales," for instance, framer of the amendment forg that in most businesses there four seasons rather than two, a that all of them have their own s cial stocks and their inevitable cumulations of odds and en Take a clothing dealer, for instan who sells trade-marked clothes a hats. He sells spring cloth summer clothes, fall clothes a winter clothes. Every such dea now holds clean-up sales at the of all four seasons. What wo happen were those sales cut do to two, and the manufacturer fused his consent to any ot clean-up, is that the odds and e from two of the clothier's four s sons could not be cleaned out m another change in season had m them unsalable.

It should also be said that so businesses have no seasons at so far as special stocks are c cerned. The grocery business is point. Odds and ends which unsalable at full prices are c stantly accumulating in the groc business, and the provision of bill allowing them to be disposed once every six months is of pra cally no value.

ere Will be a Vote as to Whether Manufacturer Should Fix Retail Prices cial Committee of United States Chamber of Commerce Appointed to Make Recommendations Fails to Agree and Vote Will Now be Taken. Seven Members Believe in Price-Fixing, While Three Members Do Not. Special Recommendation Against Deliberate Cutting for Any of Three Reasons.

al Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
February 11, 1916.

he United States Chamber of mmerce has decided to put it to te among its members whether Chamber shall favor the bill mitting the manufacturer to fix retail price of his products. subject has been in the hands special committee, which now rts that it is not able to present nanimous report. The majority rs price-fixing, and it was ed by seven members.

hree members of the committe—Frank H. Armstrong, of Chio, a wholesale grocer, president Reid, Murdock & Co.; Frederick Rike, of Dayton, president of Rike-Kumler department store president of the Greater Dayton ociation; and Percy S. Straus, New York, of R. H. Macy & , and president of the New York ail Dry Goods Association—pred a minority report "unable to rove of the principle of price ntenance as being in the public rest." They recommended efore that no legislation on the ect be enacted at this time. se signing the majority report e: George M. Courts, of Galvesn Texas, formerly president of National Association of Station- James F. Finneran, of Boston, ident of the Woodward Drug ; Henry B. Joy, of Detroit, ident of the Packard Motor ; Paul H. Nystrom, of New k, a retailing expert; F. H. itcher, of Boston, president of American Shoe Tip Co.; Edd S. Rogers, of Chicago, a law- and a copyright and tradek authority; and Prof. Cherton.

he majority report makes the owing argument for price-fixing the manufacturer:—

1. A properly regulated system of ice maintenance on identified merandise made and sold under competitive conditions puts the emphasis in competition upon quality and service, while at the same time, it provides for the public adequate protection against extortion.

2. Price maintenance under these conditions preserve the social advantage of an adequate incentive to invent and devise new products.

3. Price maintenance under these conditions serves to prevent monopolistic control of production processes by powerful distributors.

4. Price maintenance under these conditions preserves the social advantages of such distribution conveniences as are represented by neighborhood stores and by small, but skillful merchants. In some trades it is the sole guarantee of the preservation of the accepted system of distribution. For instance, it assures the preservation of the book stores as individual enterprises. If the social value of such factors as these is less than their economic cost they are not worth preserving. But who is ready at this time to encourage their annihilation? It is noteworthy that the agitation in favor of restoring to producers the control of resale prices originated with the small, independent retailers, and that most of the opposition to it comes from the large and powerful retail concerns.

5. The right of the producer to set resale prices is an accepted principle of business law. It has been restricted recently in this country by close decisions of the Supreme Court, none of which was decided on the basis of general principle alone. The committee believes that in the long run the public interest will be best served by legislation specifically permitting this method of doing business in identified articles made and sold under competitive conditions.

The minority, who are oppposed to price-fixing, take the ground that the recommendation of the majority is directly contrary to the conclusions of Federal and State courts on matters of principle, that the right to fix resale prices supposed to exist for a short time was never understood to exist except as an incident to patents, and that anti-trust provisions in the constitutions and laws of twenty-nine States indicate a policy expressly inconsistent with the idea of maintenance of resale prices. The minority dwell upon the importance of trade being "unhampered and unshackled by the requirements or commands of any men, or combinations of men, or any systems whatsoever," recalling the well-known principle of the common law that there could be no valid restrictions governing the transfer of articles of trade from hand to hand. Finally they take the stand that legislation legalizing price maintenance will give rise to a situation such that it will become difficult for men who seek to enter manufacturing and small merchants to establish themselves.

One very vital recommendation which a supplemental report makes is that a law be passed forbidding deliberate cutting on branded articles with the purpose or effect of (a) Making it unprofitable for other retailers to handle said articles. (b) Promoting the sale of a substitute or imitation. (c) Attracting trade away from competitors, where the result is to injure the reputation of said articles or the good will of their producers or materially to impair the general distribution of said articles.

HOLT.

Dried Peach Combination Now Organized.

Nearly 700 peach growers met last week at Fresno, Cal., to further plans for the organization of the California Peach Association, which hopes to control next season's market for dried peaches in the same manner that the Raisin Association controls the raisin market. At the meeting, sufficient pledges were received to assure the furtherance of the undertaking. The company is incorporated for $1,000,000, and every grower to receive its benefits is required to subscribe for at least one share of the stock. It was agreed that the plan would not be undertaken unless at least $250,000 was subscribed. This minimum was materially exceeded, the total subscriptions amounting to $360,000. James Madison, head of the Raisin Association, was active in the peach meeting and probably will act as the guiding hand for the peach men. Those who subscribe for stock and who pledge their output to the association, do so with the proviso that the association will not undertake to operate unless at least 75 per cent. of the peach acreage in the San Joaqin valley joins in. No effort will be made to influence the 1915 crop, but the association expects to be in good running order to take over the 1916 crop. The object of the organization is to rescue the peach market from the dumps in which it has been resting for several months.

Dear Sir:—I am inclosing a copy of a four-page folder which is mailed twice a month to a selected list. Would be pleased to have you comment on it. Any criticisms or suggestions will be greatly appreciated. Yours truly,

E. M. CHAMBON.

The folder enclosed was quite unique. It has four pages 6 x 9 inches, but folds up for mailing into half that size folded lengthwise. The printing and the paper are both exceedingly good. I think I have never had come into this department grocers' advertising matter printed on any better paper, and I don't recall any quite as good. In fact a grade not quite as expensive would have done as well. I am reproducing one of the two inside pages about a third smaller than the original:—

The balance of the little paper is on this same order. I consider it very good advertising. Instinctively I form a picture of this store after looking over the advertising and it is a decidedly high grade picture. Of course that doesn't do the store any good, because I can never be led by that mental picture to become a customer, and the people in McDonald know the store as it is. Nevertheless, there is much in creating an atmosphere for a store—its place in the sun—even with those people who live right next door to it. You can never tell when that impression in consumers' minds will help you in some way.

As to the typographical lay-out of this paper, there is really but one thing to say. The paragraphs I think would balance better if the price line at the bottom were set in small boldface. The name of goods and the price belong in b face anyway, because they are l naturally display lines.

* * *

One other thing occurs to m say: I don't believe it is good vertising policy to hand y people too many specials at time. It is scattering the shot, not only that, but it is bad edu tion for consumers, for it gets t to expect too much. You h some "comfort specials," s Saturday specials, some can goods specials, and the last pag devoted entirely to specials. much sweet stuff soon t people's stomachs and in a l while they are apt to turn aga all sweets. BABBITT'S CLEANSER

The Big Seller

The large, new can of Babbitt's Cleanser that sells for 5 cents enables your customers to cut the cost of cleaning in half because it's as big and as good as others which cost 10 cents. It sells twice as easy and twice as fast as any 10-cent cleanser. Extensive advertising is featuring the new package, the low price, and the fact that the Trade Marks are good for beautiful and useful presents. Take advantage of the demand we are creating and see that the showy can is prominently displayed on your shelves. You'll never have a complaint from a customer who uses it.

Abstract From the History of t Panama Canal.

Enormous quantities of coffee v shipped for the use of the men on Isthmus. In the period between and 1912 the William B. Harris Co New York, dealer in coffees, teas, sp and cocoa, shipped 827,903 pounds green coffee, 99,295 pounds of roa coffee, 99,295 pounds of cocoa, 1 pounds of tea and 31,891 pounds spices. This firm continued its s ments until the completion of the ca These supplies were selected for t quality under competitive bids, and v afterward demanded on account of t popularity with the canal army. meet the climatic conditions on the Z the tea, spices and cocoa were supp in tins, with each tin wrapped in pa ment paper and sealed.—Advt.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can possibly sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it a a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

What the Name "Heinz" on Food Products Means to Your Customers.

It means many buildings, thousands of work people, and the spirit with which they work. It means vegetables and fruits grown in the soil they like best; it means cleanliness about every operation. But more than all else, it means that every bottle or can bearing the Heinz name has in it all the results of these far-reaching methods; that its contents are pure, and clean, and above all, delicious.

Here is an established consumer confidence on which you can build more business. Are you carrying as many of the "57 Varieties" as your customers ask for?

Fort Cumberland Catsup, J. G. Orrick & Son, Cumberland, Md.

None of the thirty-three preserved samples contained more than the legal amount of benzoate.

The department's statement closed with the following interesting comment on the wide dispa in the prices of catsup:—

It is of interest to note, in th connection, that the price ketchup is almost as variable the names of the brands. The seems to be little or no attempt standardize price and quantity s multaneously and we therefore s such extremes as 4 ounces for cents and 7½ ounces for 5 cen or nearly four times as much one case as in the other in propo tion to the price paid. If we fu ther take into consideration t amount of solid matter in t ketchup, we find the disparity ev greater, for in the above examp the higher priced ketchup, inste of being richer in solids, is actual 20 per cent. lower.

The average price per ounce ketchup is 1 cent. Now, takin the range of difference in tot solids as compared in ketchups equal price, we find variations the way from 16.73 per cent. for t lower to 35.32 per cent. for t highest, or more than double th actual value in one case as com pared with the other. Between th lowest residue found, which is 14 per cent., and the highest, which 37.20 per cent., is a ratio of almo 3 to 1, while if we compare t prices and volumes of these tw particular samples, we shall fi that the lower priced articles co contain slightly more actual val than the higher when reduced the small unit of price compa son.

The department draws the lowing conclusions from the vestigation:—

First, That an almost unparall improvement has occurred in t quality of the tomato ketchup the market in the matter of t use of chemical preservatives. T percentage of purity in the sen of freedom from preservatives this respect, has risen from l than 6 per cent. in 1904 to over per cent. in 1915.

Second, That the use of arti cial coloration has entirely disa peared at the present time, where in 1904, nearly 90 per cent. of t brands examined contained art cial color.

Third, That the allegation of t use of injurious amounts of ac and spices in brands containing sodium of benzoate has no basis fact.

Fourth, That factory conditio have improved to the extent th not one sample out of 142 bran examined was found to be of injurious character from the u of unsound materials which w formerly in common use.

Fifth, That only two samples of 142, or less than 2 per ce were illegal in any respect, and these instances it was probably manufacturing error, for there w no reason for the presence of excessive amount of preservat shown by a study of the mic scopic character of the product.

Sixth, That saccharin was found to be present in any of samples examined.

An Oddity of Benzoate of Soda.

There is something peculiar about benzoate of soda. A small class of manufacturers still persists that it is not practical to make an economical catsup without it, but a larger class, it must be admitted, are doing it every day. There has never been any consistency and uniformity of opinion about benzoate, anyway; in fact it has been one of the most hotly discussed subjects that have arisen since food laws began. The bulletin of the Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Department on catsups, just issued, shows that Austin, Nichols & Co., the New York jobbers, are using 1-10 of 1 per cent. of benzoate in their Lion brand of catsup, retailing at 18 cents for 16 ounces, while Francis H. Leggett & Co., another New York jobbing house of precisely the same calibre and status, are using none in their Nabob brand, retailing at 10 cents for 9½ ounces. Here are two similar concerns, selling similar catsup, one finding it impossible, evidently, to get along without benzoate, and the other finding it perfectly possible. Obviously both cannot be right.

This should not be taken as in the slightest degree reflecting on the brand containing benzoate. So long as it does not contain more than 1-10 of 1 per cent. the benzoated brand is just as legal as the other.

Pay-up Week.

The Pay-up Week idea has found its way into Pennsylvania. The town of Wilmerding, Pa., according to a brief item in another column, will try it during the coming week. The thing is being taken seriously, and the Burgess has issued a formal proclamation ing upon all debtors to sq up.

The idea is good. It will affect the dead beat. The man has made up his mind not to p debt will not be moved to do i Pay-up Week. But between man who pays his debts pron and the out-and-out dead beat, t is another class—the merely s less. Men in this class are no tually dishonest—they mean to but they don't get around to it. these men had personal mana their credit would always be right. Pay-up Week to men this does what a manager w do—it brings a sort of outside sure to bear on them. It nu them. And undoubtedly a lo them will respond and pay.

After Pay-up Week is ove Wilmerding this paper will deavor to report how it turned

Worth Reading and Remembering

You may have good customers and well-trained clerks, but without a proper system of handling your cash and records, you cannot get the utmost profit.

Many merchants have the mistaken idea that a good system is expensive, requires a great deal of detail work, and a knowledge of bookkeeping. This is not true. The more practical the system the more simple it is, and the less detail work necessary.

A good system will save enough money in a short time to more than pay for itself.

Do We Believe in Trading Stamps?

The following letter has been received from a responsible and valued subscriber, and besides answering it by mail, I shall answer it here because the matter is of general interest:—

Danielsville, Pa., Feb. 7, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We are at present considering to give trading stamps to our cash customers so as to stimulate cash trade. Do you believe in giving trading stamps? Give reason for or against.

The L. H. Parke Co., Philadelphia, have all their goods packed with trading stamps, of which we sell their coffee, tea and baking powder. They also sell their stamps. Do you think it best to have your own stamps made and buy premiums outright, or buy stamps from some party like the above-named and let them take care of the premiums? Yours truly, MARSH & HERMAN.

By T. H. Herman.

I suppose that I may claim to have considerable knowledge of trading stamps from all angles. I have represented trading stamp companies, I have represented merchants sued by trading stamp companies, I have represented associations who believed in trading stamps, and associations who did not believe in them, I have studied trading stamp legislation and trading stamp court decisions, I have looked into the trading stamp scheme from both the retailer's and the consumer's standpoint.

So that when I am asked "do you believe in giving trading stamps," I can answer quite positively without much hesitation.

Fundamentally, I do not believe in trading stamps or premiums of any kind.

Practically, I do believe in them in certain cases.

Now let me explain that. Fundamentally, there is no excuse for premiums at all. When a man sells a suit of clothes at a fair price, there is no room in the transaction for a china plate, or a coupon or a trading stamp. Each party to the sale got a fair return for what he gave up, and there is no more reason why the buyer should get a premium for buying than there is that the seller should get one for selling.

The premium is something foreign and extraneous, intruded into a transaction which if it is fair, is complete of itself and leaves no room for anything foreign and extraneous.

Viewed from that standpoint, i. e., the purely ethical, premiums haven't a leg to stand on, in my judgment.

But they must be viewed as a practical question, too. And viewed as a practical question, it cannot be denied that premiums and trading stamps appeal to consumers. They appeal to them most mightily. People who have tried it, and know, say that out of ten people, more will be moved to buy by trading stamps than will be by cut prices. It is the old glamour of the something for nothing. The trading stamps, and the couches and rugs and cut glass that they represent, introduce a sort of romance into a transaction that ordinarily would possess no romance at all.

The stupendousness of the trading stamp business, without anything more, demonstrates the truth of that.

I am bound to believe, as a practical question, in anything that makes it easier to sell goods and to get a profit on them. Since it is apparently not denied that trading stamps do that, I am compelled to admit that in certain cases I believe in trading stamps and would hesitate to use them if I had a s I say in certain cases. If I h retail business, and it was run along well without trading sta I should never even think of ad ing them. I should let well enc alone. But if my business dragging, or were forced to unusual competition, or were need of a general tonic, I sh consider trading stamps very ously indeed as a means to an

I am assuming, of course, trading stamps are to be used estly and fairly.

You do not have benefit in your premiums of body's large buying power. main argument which has urged for your own trading st plan is that you, instead of trading stamp company, get benefit of the lapses, that is, stamps which are not redeeme premiums. But I am told that ing stamp lapses are far less ay than they used to be, and really come not to amount to h. If that is true, the main ar- ent for your own trading ps falls. A Curious View of New York Grocery Stores. Various Trade Items. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, February 18, 1916.

A very interesting statement concerning the quality of the grocery stores in this city has seen light here during the week. It was written by a man who formerly lived in California and who for some time has been living in this city. His description of the New York grocery store is very vivid. Part of it is as follows:—

> There are just two classes of grocery stores in New York. The one is represented by Park & Tilford and the Acker, Merrill, Condit Co. In all my wanderings to and fro, from the nethermost end of Brooklyn, down near Fort Hamilton, clear out to the extreme northerly line of the Bronx, I have not noted more than half a dozen other stores that are fit to be placed in this first class, which in general character are somewhat below the grade of the Jevne stores in Los Angeles, and in prices charged about the same.
> The remainder of the stores, which do about 99 per cent. of the grocery business of New York are mere holes-in-the-wall. Usually there are two or three to be found in a block of a dozen shops, and this does not include the delicatessen shops, which are to be found in about the ratio of one to every two grocery stores.
> Most of these little New York grocery stores are dirty. The floors are seldom swept, and when this does happen the cheap, pine flooring is seen to be so stained and worn that you almost wish it were covered with dirt again. The reason of this is that most of the proprietors are a scant generation removed from the big European cities. They themselves are used to dirt and see no objection to it. They do not realize it is there. New York has taught them nothing about the charm of cleanliness. True, the streets of Gotham are, possibly, the cleanest in all the United States, but one does not necessarily think of a street as a model store, and so there is usually more dust and debris to be found in the grocery store than in the street.
> One day I stopped at a little outdoors vegetable stand to buy a bunch of celery root. I selected the bunch, and, to make the parcel compact, twisted off the tops and was thoughtlessly, about to toss them into the gutter. The voluble Italian in charge of the stand grabbed the leaves from my hand. "No throw in street," he sputtered. "Police all time make helluva row." And he tossed them through the open door of the grocery store, of which his stand was the annex. It did not seem to occur to him to have a can or box handy for such purposes, and the grocer, probably partner in the business, made no objection to having the store used as a garbage receptacle.
> After you are used to the dirt, the next thing you notice is the unkempt and crowded condition of these stores. With ground rents so high as they are in New York, every foot of space is valuable, and the average one-horse grocer of this type has a storeroom perhaps twenty-four feet long by half as wide. Necessity being the traditional mother of invention, one would expect the result of this economy of space to be ingenuity in the arrangement of goods, to get the largest possible stock in the least possible room compatible with convenience in getting at it.
> Instead of this, the rule is the exact opposite. Canned goods, bags of dried beans and the like, boxes of fruit and vegetables, outgoing orders, incoming supplies—everything is heaped about in the utmost confusion. If you want anything out of the ordinary, the clerk doesn't know whether they have it or not, or if they did have it he doesn't know whether there is any left, or if he knows it is somewhere in the shop he doesn't know where to look for it. He calls the proprietor, who leaves off waiting upon another customer, and together, with perhaps half a dozen other customers in the store, they suspend business while they search nooks and corners for the desired article, perhaps only to be forced to confess failure to locate it. Meanwhile, as there is doubtless another grocery store within a few yards, one or two customers have gone elsewhere.

Why not put it this way: "I don't like any man who at his own expense gets orders for me?" Orders, let it also be said, that pay you a better profit, labor considered, than anything else you sell.

"The Ferris Monthly Chat"

With 30,000 Grocers on the Atlantic Slope

Some Orators in Conventions and enterprising Merchants who give interviews to ubiquitous Reporters persist that the Distributive Food Produ Trade in our Country is in a mess generally. Our eye catches a headline even in the Journal of Commerce.

"IS THE SMALL GROCER DOOMED?"

Is it as bad as that? And the Jobbers have something wrong with their "internal workings" too. Not always sunshine with them. Did you noti the things talked about at the 28th Annual Meeting of the New York State Wholesale Grocers' Association, held at Rochester, last month?

"Manufacturers Selling the Retailer Direct," "Chain Stores," "Abuses in the Jobbing Trade," "Cutting Prices," "Increase Cost of Doing Business," "Allowing Cash Discounts After the Discount Period Has Passed," "Free Deals," and "Subsidizin Salesmen."

Well! Well! Merchandising of high or low degree is not an easy job. What is your special difficulty? And is there a way to "down it"?

Now, where there is so much smoke there is always fire somewhere. What is back of this smoke? We are talking to Retail Grocers. Most of y splendidly deserve success, but two or three of the Stores about Town, for instance, have no show and would better stop tonight. There is no special re why they exist. What is the trouble?

1. Sometimes a LOCALITY loses its former advantage. One of our most successful Markets of twenty-five years ago is closing up. They their money when their Market was the center of a resident "Brown Stone" population. Business, Stores, Warehouses, and Manufactories, have driven their valuable patrons away and they will not return. Is there any use of a man's trying to stick it out there when the glory of his location has depart When you are next in New York stroll up Sixth Avenue, from 13th Street See what a business graveyard it is. Twenty-five years ago it was the busi Center—now there stands empty the old Store of Macy & Company (later Siegel), Simpson, Crawford Store, O'Neill's, while the former Siegel Cooper Compa (now J. B. Greenhut), is moving on, but in the Receiver's hands. Fortunes were made here in the 80's, but fortunes have since been lost as the best ret Trade swept up 5th Avenue and the Real Estate slump has been crushing to all holders.

2. An unattractive Store—Floors not noticeably clean. Dust in the little corners. Windows smutty. Stock in a hodge-podge. No effort to get t best display of what there is. It is not the "much" shown in a mass, but the smaller bits of things that attract the eye; that win the favor of the Consum Are we right?

3. Bigger Men Wanted—from the "Boss" down. That doesn't sound pleasant to any of us, but we average men don't grow unless we wake up the necessity and make up our minds we will. And, in many ways, it is a question whether the present Retail Grocer can grow into "A Bigger Man," Activity, in Popularity, in Ideals as to Qualities and Service, or whether he will be swept down with the tide. If he grows, he will have a Better Store, Bet Goods, Better Service, Better Salesmen, and a Better Understanding of Human Nature, (i. e., how to win and hold Humans to the best things). Then t chances are he will hold his own and go ahead on a new successful voyage.

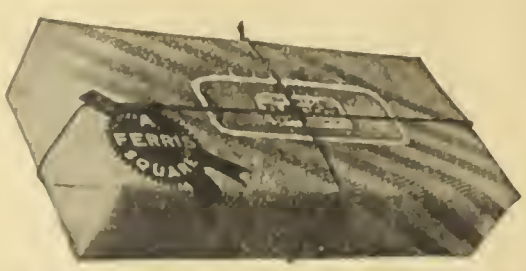
An intelligent Housekeeper said to "Ye Editor" a few days ago: "I like to trade with Mr. A. He is the best Merchant in Town. He knows g goods and he keeps them. He knows what I want and selects them. He never gives me what I don't want nor urges me to take what is 'Cheaper and J as Good.' Yet he grew up from a little Fruit Stand to a Corner Store, with Fine Fruits and Luxuries. He knew how to become 'A Bigger Man.'" A that without cutting prices or selling "cheaper" goods.

Another Housekeeper, living in the Old Heights Section of Brooklyn, only two or three blocks from the Stores of great Display, Broadside Adv ing, Special Sales Cuts, etc., said: "I have tried them. I have come back to the Grocer on the next corner to my home. He always gives me what I —good quality and excellent service, and his prices are not unreasonable for what I buy of him. I shall stick to my corner Grocer."

There is an advantage in a small, tidy, neighborly Store. Do you take an Orange with your Breakfast? And do you want only one? You d have to go to a Wholesale Fruit Store where there are 100,000 others, in order to eat your Orange, do you? See? Don't be discouraged. You will w out. Many of our friends are doing this. The Customers who drifted away for Bargains, Cut Prices, find low grade goods do not satisfy, and they a returning. The Manager of one of our Largest Stores calls these the "come-backers" and they come back to stay.

We, too, are fighting it out on these lines with the Ferris Hams and Bacon. We offer YOU (1)—QUALITY and (2) SERVICE! We only exp One Grocer in Five. Are you the ONE?

And have the Ferris Meats Superior Quality?



Away down in Peru is one of the Foreign Merchants who believes in Ferris Goods. He sends us a photograph, telling us this bevy of bright people n a picnic excursion to visit the celebrated Copper Mines of Cuzco.

They take their Lunch with them and the Meat Course pleases them all. It is a Ferris Ham, chosen above all other Brands, away up among the Andes outh America! Thanks to our South American Friends. We appreciate this discrimination and their praise.

A prominent Grocer in Southern Georgia had been seduced away from us by the constant and reckless cutting of prices. A rich Northerner has a er home there; the other day a ham was ordered from his Home and the Grocer sent it. The following day the millionaire called and told the Grocer —— Ham wasn't worth a ——" and asked why he didn't handle good Hams. The Grocer said "What Ham is a good Ham?" The millionaire answered ptly, "Why, Ferris, of course—the one good Ham." So the House swings back on the Ferris again, and "for keeps." Our thanks to the millionaire. will take him in our Men's Bible Class and teach him better manners with his language, but we don't need to improve his judgment on Meats, do we?

Do you know Charleston, South Carolina? Then you know Welch & Eason, Merchants, Gentlemen, Friends. A Copy of their Dainty Monthly Price comes to us. This is a bit of its story,—"Ferris Trade Mark Hams—one of the oldest Brands and certainly the very highest quality sold; known all the world for its fine flavor. Prices are not really higher than generally asked for Hams of common origin. We solicit orders from those who ciate the quality of what they eat, and are not given to letting prices overshadow every other consideration." Thank you, again, Good Friends, you ie Bull's Eye when you fire your rifle.

An Eastern Girl of earlier years, now a Grandmother, sent word from Detroit last week: "I am invited to a Bridge Party this afternoon. I sure go! our Hostess announces "The Souvenir to the best player will be 'A Ferris Ham!' And I am going for that Ham!"

How would it do for you to put a Ferris Ham in your show-window bearing a neat card—

A TASTY PRIZE FOR YOUR BRIDGE PARTY?

Fetching? Those odd, unexpected things often count in advertising.

Oh, Yes! One thing more! The Nestor of the Grocery Journal profession (can you spell his name?) writes us: "I have neglected to tell you the delight the Family had in eating a Ferris Ham at New Years. My colored Chef cooked it to perfection. It was as tender as the breast of a squab of exquisite flavor. Even the children exclaimed with delight. There was no turkey we had during the Holidays that was as captivating to the palate mphasizes what I have often said to you—that if the Cook is right and the Ham is right, you get a poem in Smoked Meats."

Enough said for now.

One more "last word." We print our prices. Invariable! Is not that "A Square Deal"?

Your orders will have our prompt attention

Misrepresentations in Evaporated Milk Advertising Are Hurting Its Sale

Well-known Condensed Milk Man Points Out Familiar Advertised Claims in Milk Advertising and Shows That They Cannot be True. The Harm That They do the Business.

I have never believed that the misrepresentations in evaporated milk advertising were prompted by any desire to defraud the consumer, nor with any malicious intent on the part of the manufacturer. Whether this be the case or not, the result as far as the consumer is concerned is the same.

During the past year more than ever I have eagerly read all evaporated milk advertising that has come within my observation in the various accepted media of advertising—magazines, newspapers, street car and outdoor advertising. Some of these advertisements are so patently misrepresentative of actual fact that every manufacturer in the industry—yes, the whole industry itself and with it the manufacturer himself making the claims, suffer instead of benefit by the very publicity given. And think of it—good money is paid to self inflict this injury!

Wish to call your attention to a line from an evaporated milk advertisement which appeared several months ago. Listen to it:—

"Original flavor of pure milk is retained."

Here's another:—

"Comes to you with the same delicious country taste of original milk."

Now that is an absolute misstatement. All of us know that no evaporated milk tastes like fresh, rich milk. If that is true, why try to "kid" ourselves into believing that we can "kid" the public into believing it? The gustatory nerves and the palate of the consumer are just as sensitive as those of the manufacturer and we must never forget it.

If statements such as the above were infrequent in evaporated milk advertising copy, I should not take up your time to direct your attention to them; but it is in the very frequent appearance of such claims that their greatest danger lies. Do not believe there is a man who feels that claims such as these ever made a permanent new user for evaporated milk, and permanent new users are the only kind of new users who are worth a penny to the industry or even worth to the manufacturer the investment placed behind the advertisement.

Here's another line taken from recent advertisement:—

"Tastes like rich, pure cream."

Suppose that such an advertisement made its appearance before the public during strawberry time and that a housewife, who had never before used evaporated milk, was prompted by that advertisement to purchase a trial can and serve it the following breakfast with strawberries to a husband and children accustomed to fresh cream. Wouldn't she—wouldn't you, if you were in her place, after the first taste, say that you had been imposed upon—that the product was not as advertised; but that the trial has been secured through misrepresentation? And if you stopped to analyze just a little further, you would say that the influence and power of all advertising had weakened with this imposition upon the family group, for not only would it be a long time before this purchaser bought another can of evaporated milk, but she would be a little more skeptical of the next advertisement she read.

They say there's a sucker born every minute. Now even if the evaporated milk industry could procure the one-time patronage of each and every sucker as fast as he was born, there would still be too few upon whom the stable foundation of the future evaporated milk consumption could be built.

The sad part of it all is that the trial patronage of this same woman can be secured for evaporated milk without such distortion of fact. Now wouldn't it be better to state that due to the fact that evaporated milk is concentrated and sterilized, it has a distinctive flavor, a liking for which is readily acquired and that while acquiring this liking, the user is likewise acquiring a taste for safe milk? By stating such facts, would not the chances of securing permanent new users be greater?

In calling attention to statements such as these I do not wish it understood that I pose in the "holier than thou" garb. Think we are all guilty of the misdemeanor as charged in the indictment, if not in spirit, at least in word.

Following are still further claims from evaporated milk advertisements which appeared recently:—

"There's always pure cream for breakfast."

"Ready for use when you want delicious pure cream."

"You can whip——milk to light whipped cream."

"Use it as it comes from the can when you want pure, rich cream for your coffee or dessert."

These are but a few of many similar mis-statements (or if not mis-statements perilously near to it) that I have noticed during recent months. Much of this improper copy can be eliminated; in fact, all of it can be eliminated from our advertising by proper co-operation between manufacturer and advertising agency.

It is not a good idea to refer to canned milk as a substitute. Advertise it for what it is.

Do not think such words as "purest," "richest," "finest," etc., should be used in advertising copy. Exaggerations detract rather than increase the value of the copy.

Considering the small percentage of homes in which evaporated milk is to-day being used, you will agree with me that evaporated milk has greater possibilities than any other food product packed in cans. Further, there is no branch of the canning industry that is in such dire need of intelligent, unified, educational advertising effort on the part of the manufacturers who make up that industry. If the canned milk industry is to grow in the measure that the advantages of the products entitle its growth, permanent new users must be made for canned milk by advertising with not only our personal interests in mind, but those of the entire industry; and as heretofore stated, the fundamental purpose of milk manufacturers' advertising copy must be to tell the prospective consuming public in truthful terms what evaporated milk is and to show and advocate to the housewife the variety of its uses.

In conclusion, the stability and success of the milk industry lies in our ability to create permanent users for our products and in ing the present users greater sumers—and this can be done broad educational advertising, basis of which is "Proper Adve ing Copy." Advertising copy w for you—the better the copy, better the work.

A Check on Strange Salesmen

Without any reflections whatever upon salesmen as a class, you know as well as we do that some dishonest men occasionally get in the business. When a strange salesman comes into your store you don't know—no matter what house he represents—what kind of an experience you are going to have with him.

Unless he uses specialty stamps on his orders. If he does that, he is practically sure to be the right kind of a man, but even if he isn't, you are still certain of the right kind of treatment, for the specialty stamp insures it absolutely.

The whole trade is banded together to handle a stamped specialty order with fairness and promptness.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market has shown no change for the week. Business is still very fair, without any cutting of prices whatever. Buyers are glad to pick up anything which comes to them at a concession, but such stock is very scarce. There have been no price changes for the week.

Coffee.

Rio and Santos coffee continue to be high and the week marks another fractional advance. The main reason for the present firmness in Brazil coffees is, as before stated, the difficulty in obtaining sufficient freight room to get them from Brazil to this country. Other grades of Brazils are firm and high, but perhaps not to the same extent as Rio 7s and Santos 4s. Mild coffees are also steady to firm, but without material change for the week. The supply of these coffees is not heavy. Java and Mocha unchanged and quiet.

Sugar.

The sugar market has become firmer and higher during the week. Raws are now quoted at around 5.14 cents per pound and refiners generally are asking 6.25 for granulated. There are several factors in the situation, but the main one is the shortage in available spot sugar. If England really cuts down in her consumption of sugar, it will undoubtedly make a difference in the American market, which should become somewhat weaker. There seems to be no doubt that this is England's intention, for notice was sent out during the week by the government that they proposed to reduce their consumption to 400,000 tons, as against 1,900,000 tons last year. The consumptive demand for sugar is fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose remains unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is steady to firm and in ordinary seasonable demand. Sugar syrup is scarce and very high; so high, in fact, that some holders are asking a cent more for compound in consequence. Molasses continues firm, with black strap relatively the highest grade. The consumptive demand for sweets is generally good.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are weaker apparently on account of lack of buying. It has been possible to get sales through at a dollar a dozen for Maryland 3s during the week in a large way, f. o. b., which is equivalent to a decline of 5 cents. Holders still insist that as soon as buying begins again the market will return to where it was. Owing to the fact that some sellers are sold up on future tomatoes, there is a disposition on the part of some of them to ask 2½ cents more for No 3s. Corn and peas are unchanged for the week and in fair demand. Peas are feeling a little better. Apples unchanged and dull. California canned goods are selling to some extent at a small advance over the opening prices, due to duplicate stocks on the coast. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged and dull.

Fish.

There is some demand for mackerel on account of Lent, but not enough to cause any particular change in the market. All stocks of Norway mackerel are firmly held. Cod, hake and haddock are selling seasonably at unchanged prices. Salmon is wanted particularly and is selling well at ruling quotations. Domestic sardines are firm at the recently noted advance. Packers are talking another advance on account of the higher prices for cottonseed oil. Imported sardines scarce, high and firm.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes show no change for the week. The Eastern markets still show that concessions can be obtained from holders. Peaches and apricots are unchanged and only fairly active. Currants, raisins and all other dried fruits are in seasonable demand, at unchanged prices.

Butter.

The butter market is firm at unchanged prices, with an upward tendency on all grades. The consumptive demand is very active. Fresh butter is cleaning up on arrival. A continued good market is looked for without much change.

Eggs.

The receipts of fresh eggs are increasing considerably and the market shows a decline for the week of 2 cents per dozen. The quality of the present arrivals is very good and the consumptive demand is increasing daily. The market is healthy on the present basis, with the weather still the chief factor.

Cheese.

The cheese market is steady and unchanged, with a moderate consumptive demand. Exporters are not at present buying much cheese. When they come into the market again prices will probably show a further advance.

Provisions.

The provision market is firmer and unchanged, with only a moderate consumptive demand. Pure and compound lard are steady and in light demand at unchanged prices. Barreled pork, dried beef and canned meats are dull and unchanged.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are a shade weaker and the market in a large way to come forward is now from $3.75 to $3.85 per bushel. This is quite a decline from the highest point. Marrows are also weaker, and sales have been made during the week at a decline of 10 cents a bushel. California limas, which are ruling at 4½ cents on the coast in a large way, are at the lowest point that they have reached in six years at this season. Green and Scotch peas are unchanged and dull.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Standard Canned Goods.

The large buying of tomatoes for shipment out of the 1916 pack proves conclusively that "futures," generally speaking, have a firm grip on the buyers all over the country. The Southern jobbers have been the leaders to date, which fact has had a very good effect on both sellers and buyers. From the canners' angle of view, they figure it indicates that distressed conditions in the South are but a memory, and that the obnoxious specter—"hard times," has fallen, like Lucifer, never to arise again. Results tell us, beyond a shadow of doubt, of a large quantity of confidence now abroad, since the orders are beginning to come in from all sections, and in many cases the original purchases are being duplicated.

The Baltimore city canners have been the chief sellers of "futures" up to this time. Their limit will be reached pretty shortly, and then we must depe the country canners for our sou supply. We can still buy at our tations, but prices may change a time on account of the unwillingn the part of the out-of-town cann meet the tomato growers' adv prices for raws.

Vegetables of all kinds for imm shipment are dull, with sweet po and spinach the exceptions. Swe tatoes are in a good position ar day's purchase price looks like a investment. Spinach is in good and it will bear watching. Future especially the fancy shoepeg vari claiming much attention. Sh corn is "coming back" fast, an jobber who has the foresight to now will have no regrets this yea

There was not much interest in of any kind this week. The usual run of orders came in, but the qu per order was smaller than Pears were most sought after, bo water and syruped grades.

Cove oysters were dull and the tations remain the same.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

The Glass Jar Idea.—Some time since we wrote about the effectiveness of the glass jar; a recent experience has still more fully established this receptacle as a special attraction. Italian chestnuts weren't moving. They were shown up in different ways and different places. At last a big aquarium jar was produced. This was filled with the nuts and placed on the counter. A new sign read, "Chestnuts for Roasting, 10 Cents per Pound," and in less than a week the stock was cleaned up.

There were 40 to 50 10-ounce packages of alphabets for soup, with labels somewhat soiled. Nobody wanted the goods at half price—5 cents. The packages were cut open and the contents turned into a jar, at 15 cents a pound. All sold.

That "Cost Window" we wrote about last week sold on Saturday only, nearly 14 cases No. 2½ cans broken sliced Hawaiian pineapple, 11 cents a can. You can make your window dead, half dead or very much alive.

Dill Pickles.—"Wonder what's the matter with my dill pickles?" said the clerk. "I'm not selling half the quantity I did a year ago."

"Your pickles are all right," said the manager; "you are the 'matter.' Fill a couple of these big pans with them, place them in a showcase, put the doors, surround them with bay l as a set-off, and report the resu three days."

The three days being up, the said, "Please ask the porter to another barrel of dills."

Although prices are reasonable, buyers do not seem inclined to ipate further wants until they have d the larger part of the compara- free purchases of December and ary. Movement for consumption is usly estimated, some claim less ordinary, others report it larger usual, as the low prices and good y combine to make the handling e a profitable commodity all along ne. Extra fancy Honduras heads ery scarce, and whenever a lot of is offered, it brings a premium. vices from the South along the tic coast report that new business not been very much in evidence g the week, but that the future bookings, together with slight demand, has kept the volume up to about last week's movement. There is very little Carolina left, but the movement since the first of the year has been very small.

At New Orleans the clean rice market is strong, a further advance of ⅛ to ¼ having taken place in Blue Rose and broken rices, while Japans are commanding attention now from Porto Rico, due to the scarcity of lower grades, and an advance of ⅛ has also taken place in this variety. Fancy Honduras heads are scarce and commanding a premium.

In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, the mills report fairly active inquiry and are disinclined to shade list prices. There was a further advance noted in the market for rough rice of all grades, and from the very fact that no sales were reported, indicates that the holders are not inclined to accept to-day's prevailing prices, which are 25 cents to 40 cents higher than the market for clean.

Spices.

The market has been exceedingly active and very much unsettled. Prices being sharply higher in many articles. Trading has been large throughout the week and the indications at this time are that higher prices will rule.

Peppers.—Market is firm for all grades and higher prices are ruling. It is now reported the British Government has placed an embargo on exports of peppers. This applies to English possessions. The advance in freight rates alone this week has meant from ½ to 1 cent per pound in added cost. Stocks here are small, and a much higher market is predicted.

Red Peppers.—In very active demand at generally firmer prices.

Cloves.—Quite active and future prices are higher. There is a strong undertone to all positions.

Pimento (Allspice).—Firmer and has advanced ¼ to ½ cent per pound. Higher rates probable.

Mace.—Very scarce and in good demand for all grades. A very firm market is indicated.

Nutmegs.—In large demand for all grades. Higher prices are prevailing. The trend is upward.

Cassias.—Saigon scaree and in urgent demand. Batavia grades are scarce and prices are firm. China grades very scarce and high prices are being quoted from China.

Gingers.—Very firm and slightly higher. It is reported the African and Cochin crops are small.

Tapiocas.—Very active and sharply higher on account of the steep advances in freight rates.

Paprika.—Slightly higher, due more or less to the advance in ocean freights and insurance. Stocks here are small.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—Generally firmer, with upward tendency. Caraway, poppy and mustard all very firm and likely to be higher. Sweet herbs in fair demand, at generally unchanged prices.

Pay-up Week in Wilmerding, Pa.

The week of February 21st to 26th, inclusive, has been designated as "Pay-Up Week" in Wilmerding, Pa., and the Burgess calls upon all the citizens of the borough to pay their debts during that week. His proclamation is as follows:—

Whereas, The week of February 21st to 26th, inclusive, has been designated as National Pay-Up Week, to be observed throughout the nation; and

Whereas, People in cities and towns and communities in all parts of the country are uniting to make National Pay-Up Week a memorable event, conducive to the good of all; and

Whereas, An event of this kind is bound to prove beneficial to every citizen in every city and town that observes it;

Therefore, I, by authority vested in me as Burgess of Wilmerding, Pa., do hereby designate and proclaim the week of February 21st to 26th, inclusive, as Pay-Up Week in this community, and I do sincerely trust that every man and every woman in our city or community who owes a debt will endeavor to pay it during this week and thus aid in the great national movement for prosperity.

plans will be adopted for arousing the sentiment of the trade.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea rather quiet, with all lines steady to firm, especially India-Ceylons.—Coffee a little quieter toward the close, with some holders taking profits at the recent sharp advances. Milds quiet and firm.—Sugar firm at a considerable advance. Raws quoted at 5.14 cents. Most refiners still quoting 6.10 for granulated, although Philadelphia refiners are 15 points higher than that. Canned salmon firm, with cheaper grades practically cleaned up on the coast. Demand steady and good. Domestic sardines firm.—All canned vegetables steadily maintained, except tomatoes, which are weaker, because California canned tomatoes have come in at a lower price than Eastern brands.—Prunes about unchanged, but perhaps a trifle firmer than they were. Medium grades stronger on the coast. Raisins and currants firmer. Other dried fruits unchanged.—Wheat still uncertain and uneasy, with market closing rather weak.—Flour unchanged on last week's basis. Demand quiet.

Dry Goods Business Good.

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:—

Current wholesale distribution of dry goods is well ahead of that of the corresponding period of a year ago. Road sales for immediate and spring delivery are running well ahead and are continuing to show great gains for fall delivery.

There have been more customers in the market during the week than a year ago, and buying in the house has been excellent in all lines.

Collections are normal.

Prices on staple cotton goods and other lines are firm.

The Modern Duplicator.

Frequently this paper has been asked for the name of a good duplicator. In this issue you will find an advertisement headed "At Last! a Perfect Duplicator," manufactured by G. W. Durkin & Reeves Co., 339 Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., who say you will save time, labor and money by its use. One advantage is that it contains no glue or gelatine, and can be used indefinitely. A special price is being made to our readers.

Respectfully yours,
C. F. KLENKE.

The Individual Drinking Cup Co., 1522 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, has a monopoly on the penny slot machines for cups. They lease, not sell, their machines for an indefinite time for $15; cups cost $6 a thousand.

The Huff Paper Co., Denckla Building, Philadelphia, sell a machine for $3.50; cups $3 a thousand. Cups are released by pressing a button: no coin slot attachment.

A Collection Agency.

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Feb. 9, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Will you please give us some information in the next issue of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" for the benefit of all grocers of the Mercantile Credit Association, located at 304 Bulletin Building, Juniper and Filbert streets, Philadelphia.

Yours truly,
ONE OF YOUR SUBSCRIBERS.

We have investigated the concern named quite a number of times. It is a typical collection agency and considered no better and no worse than the others. Nobody seems to know who is really behind the name "Mercantile Credit Association." We strongly advise doing no business with concerns of this class.

Hudson Falls, N. Y.,
February 10, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Please give us a report on the reliability and any further information you may have regarding the Consolidated Aluminum Co., manufacturers of advertising matter, Oak Park, Illinois. There seems to be a clause in their contract we do not like and it does not look to be strictly on the level. Any information will be greatly appreciated.

Yours truly,
HARRY E. SWAN.

We have referred to these aluminum schemers a number of times. There are two or three of them, and so far as our knowledge goes, they all do the same kind of business. An objectionable feature is promissory notes which are transferred to "innocent third parties," and collected by them, whether the aluminum company keeps its contract or not. As a matter of fact, it usually does not keep its contract.

A Scheme Contract.

Bland, Va., Feb. 12, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—In regard to National Novelty Importing Co. and your request for contract, please find same enclosed. We made first payment February 18, 1915, as per contract, and last one November 18, 1915. We put out the advertising, etc., but our trade does not wear much jewelry. We have most of this on our hands. We are taking inventory as we have time. There will be over $200 worth we believe.

Can you sell to any one the outfit if we cannot make them take it back?

Thanking you for any help, we are, Yours very truly,
F. A. CRABTREE & Co.

Messrs. Crabtree & Co. asked some time ago whether they could make the National Novelty Import Co., Houser Building, St. Louis, Mo., take back their surplus stock, and we asked to see the contract, which is now sent. The clause covering the return of the goods is as follows:—

SALES GUARANTEED.—If purchaser desires to discontinue this profit sharing plan after one year from date of first payment, and has complied with all the terms and conditions of this order, he may return to us any goods in this order, and we agree to pay him invoice price for same.

Naturally the question is, have you complied with all the terms and conditions of this order, which appear to be as follows:

1.—To send to the N. N. I. Co. the 1st of each month for six months, a list of 24 customers, or prospective customers.

2.—To keep jewelry well displayed.

3.—To give a certificate with each 50-cent purchase.

4.—To settle the account withi 10 days from November 18, 191 by paying cash, less 5 per cent., c five notes.

If you have done all these thin we see no reason why you can claim for the balance of the goc To be sure, you may have to go St. Louis to do it.

We have no idea, however, t you will ever get any money fr the St. Louis concern for the l ance of this jewelry.

Mixing Roosevelt With Business.

I've known some prime human jackasses in my time, but I ain't seen any that could kick knee high to the one that mixes politics with his business.

He is the father of 'em all, believe me.

All of us are some tender about our religion and our politics, and when a fellow gets funny about either we ain't going to hand him any money if there's anybody else around to hand it to.

And there usually is, take it from me.

"Gee whiz, what's this?" I said to a customer of mine out in Cleveland, Ohio, last week. It was a pile of maybe a hundred one-pound candy boxes lying back in a corner of his store. Each one had a great big picture of Teddy Roosevelt on—you know who I mean—and this guff was printed underneath:—

Roosevelt is the Only Man Fit to be the Next President.

Below that my enstomer had printed "yours for the good cause," and then his name.

"They're what I had left from some special boxes I had made not long ago." And that's all he said, too. I wouldn't have gotten inside the thing at all if another customer in that same town hadn't told it to me.

I was talking with the second man about how business was, and how he and the people up there liked the President. He said most of 'em liked him pretty well.

"But there's a good bit of Roosevelt sentiment here," he said, "and it's got very hot and there's some sore feeling now. Ben Johnson is one of the hottest Roosevelt men. He swears he'll be the next President."

Ben Johnson is the customer where I saw the Roosevelt boxes. Of course that ain't his real name.

"Did you hear what he did?" he asked me.

I hadn't, but I was willing to.

"He got up a lot of boxes with Roosevelt all over 'em and wouldn't use any other. They tell me several of his customers asked him to give them other boxes, but he wouldn't do it—I don't believe he had any others—and he had a little trouble about it."

"Did he lose any trade?" I asked him.

"They say he lost two or three very good customers," he said. "You see the feeling has been so high here that the thing amounted to a good bit more than it would otherwise. He's had his brother-in-law in the store for over nine years, but the two of them got to fighting over politics and the brother-in-law's gone. Good man, too—he had a couple of jobs offered him the very day he left. They don't speak to each other now."

Ben Johnson, will you please come here a minute while I give you a good swat in the pants? I have a hunch that after a good swat you'll feel better and I'm plumb sure I will. You need it, Ben, my boy, and you need it bad. Anybody who would do the wooden-headed thing you did ought to first get swatted, and then go out and eat a meal of hay.

Now I think Teddy Roosevelt is some man myself, but I'll be blamed if I'd let twice as good a man as he is butt into my business and hurt it. I'd vote for him on election day if I wanted to, and I might even go to the Town Hall and make speeches if I could get anybody to listen. That ain't anybody's business, and I'd say so blamed quick to anybody who doubted it. But it don't seem to me I'd stick my Roosevelt views down my customers' throats. It's hard enough to get your goods down people's throats without trying to push a Roosevelt box down. Especially when it may gag 'em and make 'em throw up the goods.

Get me?

You see, this ain't as little a thing as it sounds. I have a man in my mind now who hates Roosevelt so much that if somebody brought a box in his house with Roosevelt's face on it he'd go spit in it. If he went in Johnson's store for some stuff and found he couldn't get any except in that kind of a box, h go out without it and he'd go mad.

More than that, the chance is h never go back.

is decision, issued May 5, as originally promulgated, to take effect May 1, 1915. the date on which it was to effect was postponed until May 6, with the proviso as to prod-packed and labeled prior to 1, 1916, in accordance with law with the regulations in effect to May 5, 1914, that the ef-ve date was postponed until mber 1, 1916.

merous requests recently have made to the department for a er postponement. Those re-ing this action represent that facturers and dealers still on hand large quantities of printed prior to May 5, 1914, bearing the guaranty legend serial number. It is repre-d that this supply of labels in ggregate cost many thousands llars, and that unless they can ed their owners will sustain a e loss.

the other hand, many man-urers, in expectation of the new regulation's going into operation next May, have already eliminated the guaranty legend and serial number from their labels.

All parties interested in the question, whether in favor of the extension or opposed to it, are invited to attend the hearing and present such facts as may be material. California Almond Situation Firm and Contracts Closed.

The California Almond Growers' Exchange has closed contracts for the last of the 1915 almond crop to be marketed through this agency. The crop harvested in California last year amounted to approximately to 3,800 tons, of which about 75 per cent. is controlled by this exchange. This was the largest crop in the history of the State. Some comparatively light stocks are still held by independent dealers on this coast, but it is understood that the greater part of the 1915 crop has been consumed. All quotations on spot goods have been withdrawn. The exchange reports a business for 1915 in excess of any two previous years. One factor in this big increase was the large increase in the membership, with a large crop named as the other cause. The almond crop of 1915 was the largest ever produced in California. While an accurate report of the volume of the year's business is not available, it is announced that the net returns to the grower members of the exchange will be over $1,000,000. The larger output more than counterbalances the slight drop in prices compared with 1914, so that this is the largest amount yet returned by the exchange.

Cold Weather Specialties

Fresh Sausage, Scrapple, Souse, Liver Pudding

Burk's Fresh Sausage

Composed entirely of selected tender pieces of pork, not the ordinary trimmings commonly used. Not cheapened in price and quality by the addition of tripe, boiled rice and sundry substitutes. Correctly seasoned, not offensive to sensitive stomachs because of pungent herbs. Nutritious. In four styles—hashed fine and coarse, linked and in straight casings.

Burk's Philadelphia Scrapple

Prepared from the very best materials—good, wholesome meats and extra fine corn meal. Well boiled and seasoned to suit the most critical. Not to be compared with some cheap products of doubtful hues and colors. Burk's eats as good as it looks. Superior to farmers' products. In pans of 15 pounds each.

Burk's Pig Souse

is a seasonable specialty prepared fresh daily, in pans of five pounds each. The jelly is clear and transparent and free from vegetable gelatines and ill-smelling glue stock. Contains plenty of meat and garnished with slices of lemon and parsley.

Proves attractive when turned out of the pan, and is a quick seller, saving the consumer the trouble of cooking pig's feet, so difficult to obtain at this season of the year.

Burk's Liver Pudding

Of the usual "Burk" standard—clean and unadulterated. Rich in quality and an excellent dish when fried, or, after removing the casing, hashed with potatoes. In rings of 1 pound each.

No. 351.—Possibilities of Loss by Infringing Another's Trade-mark.

Not long ago a manufacturer of a certain specialty was discussing with me the success which a certain trade-marked specialty in his line had had. There was nothing particularly notable about the article itself; it was the name and the package more than anything else. They had been cleverly advertised and exploited, and had acquired a very decided vogue. The manufacturer in question was on the verge of putting a similar article on the market, and he had decided to adopt a name and a package which bore a very decided resemblance to the other. I advised against it, because of the danger that it might be considered infringement of trade-mark and unfair competition. "But what of it?" he said. "The worst that can happen to me is that I can be stopped, and the Jones people may not pay any attention to it."

I explained to this man that the worst that could happen to him was not simply that he could be stopped, but that in addition to being stopped, he might be compelled to pay heavy damages; in other words, to pay to the owner of the trade-mark infringed, all the profits which he made from his wrongful use of the other's trade-mark.

A case has just been decided which makes this possibility so clear that I shall discuss it for the benefit of all the readers hereof who use trade names or trade-marks.

The principle which the case referred to establishes is that "where the infringement of a trade-mark is not the result of mistake or ignorance of the plaintiff's right, but is born of a deliberate and premeditated plan to divert from him business and profits fairly resulting from his own skill or enterprise, the defendant (the infringer) will not only be enjoined from continuing the infringement, but will be compelled to account for the profits which accrued from his own deliberate wrong-doing."

This was a stogie case. The original owner of the trade-mark had originated in 1905 the word "Dry Slitz," and had registered it as a trade-mark in the Patent Office in Washington. Up to the time of his suit he had made over 16,000,000 stogies under that brand. The packing, too, was peculiar. It consisted of a special design, colors, and arrangement of type.

The defendant, seeing the way in which "Dry Slitz" stogies were selling, thought he would steal some of their thunder and in 1912 he put out a brand called "Dry Sweets." His packing, labels, colorings and designs were very much like "Dry Slitz," and there was some evidence that one had been mistaken for the other. He managed to sell 600,000 stogies under the "Dry Sweets" name before he was sued for infringement of trade-mark.

At the trial the defendant made no defense except that his brand and his package were not so close to the other man's that the public could be deceived. The court decided against him, but practically did nothing more than tell him to stop it. They did rule that he would have to pay all the damage which the owner of the trade-mark could show resulted from the public having been deceived by the infringement. It is practically never possible to show any such damage, and none was shown in this case. The decision was therefore practically equivalent to telling him to stop the use of "Dry Sweets," but with all his profits on the 600,000 remaining in his pocket. There was an appeal and the higher court said this was not punishment enough. Not only must the defendant stop his infringement, but he must account to the owner of the trade-mark he infringed for every cent of profit he made on the 600,000. This is of course a horse of another color, and is the worst possibility in any case where you have intentionally or inadvertently used a brand or a package that looks like somebody else's. There is always a great difference, however, in the court's attitude toward a man who innocently and unintentionally, or sincerely believing himself to be right, infringes upon the trade-mark of another and a man like the defendant in the stogie case, who deliberately goes out to get somebody else's thunder. In the former case there will usually be only an order to cease using the infringement. This distinction is clearly shown by the following extract from the court's decission:—

> In cases where the infringement complained of was not the result of mistake or ignorance of the plaintiff's right, but was born of a deliberate and premeditated plan to divert from him business and profits fairly resulting from his own skill or enterprise, it appears to be regarded as no more than right that the defendant should be compelled to account for the profits which have accrued from his own deliberate wrongdoing. Such also appears to be the practice in the Federal courts. The principle on which such an accounting ought to be required and is usually decreed is well stated by the Supreme Court of California in Graham vs. Plate, 40 Cal. 593: "No one will deny that on every principle of reason and justice the owner of the trade-mark is entitled to so much of the profit as resulted from the use of the trade-mark. The difficulty lies in ascertaining what proportion is due to the trade-mark and what to the intrinsic value of the commodity, and if this cannot be ascertained with any reasonable certainty, it is more consonant with reason and justice that the owner of the trade-mark should have the whole profit than that he should be deprived of any part of it by the fraudulent act of the defendant." If one may deliberately and designedly prepare and execute a plan to infringe upon the trade-mark of another without running any greater risk than to be stopped at some time, by an injunction, from the further use of his fraudulent scheme, the law will not have the potency it should have in preventing the commission of unlawful acts.

We are of opinion, therefore, th the decree entered by the learn court below should be modified striking out the second paragra thereof and inserting in substi tion therefor the following: "Th defendant account for any prof made by him in the wrongful u as hereon set out, of said plaintif trade-mark." As thus modified, t decree, which is right in all other spects, is affirmed. The costs of th appeal to be paid by the appell and the record is remitted to t court below for further proceedin

The National City Bank of York, a very influential institution, issued the following statement on condition of business:—

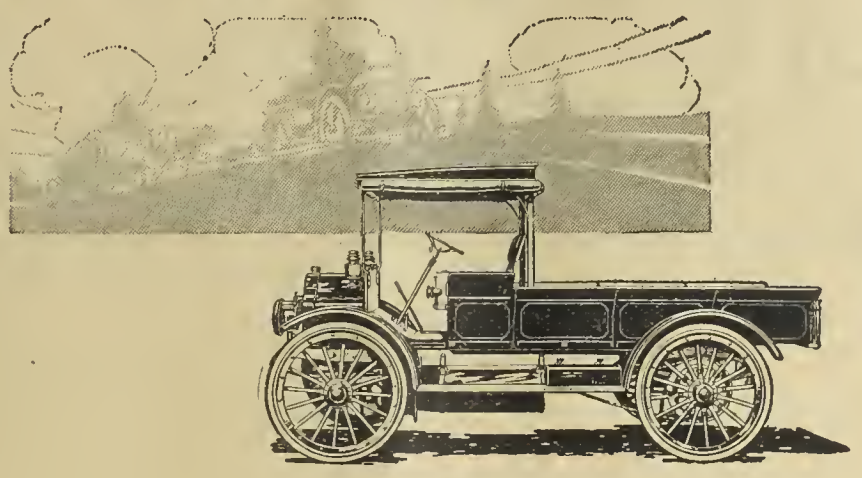
International Motor Trucks

Four Models



Lowest Prices

The merchant who would prosper most nowadays gets posted on motor truck efficiency. The firm that doggedly sticks to the old four-hoof hay-motor methods of hauling and delivery, gradually lags behind the alert competitor. This has happened in many places. Before it happens to you stop and reflect.

Write to us for a lot of sound information, facts, figures, records, etc., that will post you on International Motor Truck service. The International has passed all others in sales and popularity. That is no vague statement—the figures prove what we say. In over 200 lines of business the International is replacing horses.

International Motor Trucks will do more for you than horses and wagons can. When you are posted you will choose one of the following—Model MA, 1000-pound capacity, $600; Model M, 1000-pound capacity, $710; Model E, 1500-pound capacity, $950; or Model F, 2000-pound capacity, $1500. Dear Sir:—Please find inclosed three of my circulars. Use any of them you wish and criticize on them.

Yours truly,
W. R. Mason.

P. S.—We do all our own printing, circulars, billheads, letterheads, envelopes, etc. Commenced with a hand press, now have a foot-power press. I have a hand press for sale, good as new, for $3.50; cheap.

The circulars enclosed measures 6 x 9½ inches and were printed on very poor paper. I should buck up a little on the paper, if I were Mr. Mason. It is impossible to make advertising look otherwise than cheap when it is printed on paper like this. I am reproducing the best of the circulars reduced in size about one-third:—

W. R. MASON, THE CASH GROCER, 113 E. CARROLL ST., ST. CLAIR, PA

I believe Mr. Mason can improve his advertising in every way. He has got too many things on his sheet, for one thing, and to get them all on, has had to crowd. His circular has too much heavy type on it. Another fault, I think, is that nowhere on the circular is there one word said in commendation of any of the goods. He has given simply the name of the article advertised and the price. Once or twice there is an adjective, but the advertisement is quite lacking in punch, as it seems to me. The thing that gives punch to advertising is usually commendatory description of merchandise. Sometimes price will give it, and the greatest punch comes from attractive description plus attractive price. Mr. Mason may have the attractive price, but he has nothing else, and in some cases I believe that the prices he has quoted will not be especially attractive, standing by themselves. As for instance, "tomatoes, can 5, 7, 9, 12 cents." A quotation like that really doesn't mean a thing. It has no persuasiveness, no attractiveness, no lure. I have never known such advertising to get any traceable results.

I suggest that from a quarter to a half of these articles should have been left off, and the space thus gained be used to loosen the type up, and to give some attention to the goods.

* * *

Mr. Mason sends a couple more circulars, and they are all open to the same criticism, in my judgment—there is nothing on them but names and prices. I don't know what results he is getting from his advertising, but feel sure he can get better results if he will try to persuade his customers a little more.

Advertising Will Increase Consumption of Canned Tomatoes

So Says President Kerr of Baltimore Canned Goods Exchange. But Only if Goods Are Worthy. Believes Proper Advertising of Proper Goods Would Increase Consumption to 20,000,000 Cases.

Never doubting the tremendous force of rightly conceived and rightly directed publicity, I find it easy to give assent to a scheme of co-operative advertising that would have for its purpose the exploitation of the American tomato, both in domestic and foreign markets. And I make bold to say that with precisely the right influence operating we should be able to secure to canned tomatoes a meed of popular attention that would extend beyond our most extravagant hopes. I find it easy to say, as doubtless you do, that in spite of the impressive total of our annual output of tomatoes that we have scarce more than scratched the surface of the mine of opportunity that lies easy of access.

Over-production is the hobgoblin that has affrighted us. We have become so charmed with the idea of over-production that it has not occurred to us to search for still other causes to explain our periodic depressions. Who has thought to put the blame on under-consumption?

And yet, it is under-consumption, regular and sustained, rather than periodic under-consumption that explains why it is a large pack of tomatoes comes to us bearing an oppressive burden. The antidote for over-production is increased consumption, and increased consumption is to be the result of only one steadily operating influence—advertising. I am willing to venture the opinion that within a comparatively short period of time, as the result of a scheme of wisely directed advertising, it would be quite possible to increase the distribution of canned tomatoes to full twenty millions of cases without the very slightest disturbing effect upon the stability of the market.

Had the real import of the advertising which all packers do on their canned goods labels been recognized thirty years ago we should to-day have little reason to regard a pack of 15,000,000 of tomatoes with the disturbing fears which now possess us before such a prospect. Indeed the canner has done much advertising and candor compels the admission that he has done much that was especially wicked in its results for him. One could scarcely pay a more eloquent tribute to the potency of advertising than to point attention to its singularly perverse operations in the activities of the canners who in the ordinary sense have done no advertising whatever.

But advertising will give approval only to "high grade canned foods." Go to advertising for support only when you find yourselves in position to yield to her inexorable demands. Not until your house is in order, however, may you hope to have advertising to claim it as a permanent abiding place.

Let the prospective advertiser be reminded of the stern duty which any compact with advertising imposes and let him be forewarned of the futility of advertising unless he gives to its support the one thing needful to the attainment of complete success—quality. The tomato canner, whether individually or co-operatively, may invade the field of advertising with every hope of dreams come true if the message which he shall send to a waiting public shall be contained in a tin of tomatoes whose superb quality shall realize for the purchaser the pleasure which it was the funtcion of advertising to suggest.

President Baltimore Canned Goods Exchange.

Making Money by Featuring Eggs.

What are the opportunities that the average grocer has overlooked? What has he left undone which, if properly carried on, would without a doubt have made his store the leader in his community?

One example we believe will prove sufficient. He might have selected one item or one line of goods and made it of such a high quality and the service in connection with it so satisfactory that the trade would have come to his store rather than to his competitors for it. In other words, it would be his leader—he would feature it continually, for it he can educate the trade to the point of coming to his store, for even one item he will find he will receive the bulk of their grocery business.

The most resultful line we can suggest is eggs. Every grocer handles eggs, to be sure, but not every grocer is realizing the wonderful opportunities that eggs offer for profit in the handling, or as a leader in drawing to the store new customers. There is no line the grocer handles that Mrs. Housewife is so particular about as eggs. She will go blocks out of her way to get eggs that she knows for a certainty are strictly fresh and will be delivered to her home absolutely without breakage. And not only that, but there is a handsome profit in eggs if properly handled.

You will find that the grocer who features eggs does so in his advertising, in his talks to customers and his displays. He places an iron-bound guarantee first on the quality, and secondly, against breakage, and by the way, he has provided himself with suitable equipment for the safe delivery of the eggs to the customer's home.

Instead of buying eggs as some grocers do, already graded and put up, he buys bulk eggs direct from the farmer, grades them himself according to size, gets the regular price for the smaller ones and from 5 to 10 cents additional for the larger sizes.

Since about two-thirds of the eggs in the 30-dozen cases are large, his added profit is approximately $1 on each case. Each grade is given a name and his trade soon come to realize the exceptionally high quality of his particular brand. But unlike the grocer who handles the common brands put up by wholesalers, he finds that the trade m come to his store for his brands t cannot be bought elsewhere. Custom tell their neighbors of the excell quality of the eggs that Smith hand and new names are being added cont ually to his list.

New customers, satisfied old custc ers, a materially increased profit fr his egg department, simply because has applied a system of egg handl to his egg department that enables h to guarantee them, not only as to qu ity, but as proof against breakage delivery.

It is a simple experiment, isn't Every grocer handles eggs. The inve ment necessary to try it out amounts very little and the fact that thousa of grocers are featuring eggs succe fully and profitably makes it almos surety that other grocers can do same.

Try this simple experiment of fe uring eggs as a leader. Establish a s tem of egg handling in your store t will eliminate lost time and effort, well as prevent breakage and enable y to give better service to your custom than is to be had elsewhere. Carr out in this way you will find that trade will come to your store not o for eggs, but for other goods as w and this way you will find eggs business building and profit produc line that so many of your brother g cers have found them to be.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can possibly sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Why We Deserve Your Fruit Business

We are a substantial and reliable house; we were founded in 1861. We are not egotistical when we say reliable, because none but a reliable house could last that long.

We have had an extraordinary experience in the fruit, vegetable and nut business, and we know the markets like we know our own homes. We are not egotistical, either, when we say we know how to buy fruits, vegetables and nuts.

And we know how to sell them, too. We have learned in that half century of experience that the way to sell goods is so your customer will come back because he prefers to. We will treat you squarely and generously, for that is the only way we can hold you.

Are you receiving our price-list regularly each week? If not, a postal will bring it to your desk.

Twelve Million Dollars

That's what it cost The Shredded Wheat Company to build up a "good will asset" and a consumer demand for

Shredded Wheat

It is now the best known breakfast cereal in the world, having a steadily increasing sale from year to year, making satisfied customers and good profits for the grocer. It is ready-cooked and ready-to-serve.

The Biscuit is packed in odorless spruce wood cases which may be easily sold for 10 or 15 cents, thereby adding to the grocer's profits.

Why Consumer's Co-operative Stores Have Never Succeeded in This Country

N. O. Nelson, Who Has Done Better With Them Than Any One Else, Says It is Because They Don't Follow the English Plan of Charging Full Prices and Distributing the Profits as Dividends. Tells How He Works His Own Schemes.

[The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has had a great many inquiries about the movements among consumers to establish co-operative stores in this country, following the highly successful English method, which does millions of business per year. We have always given all the information that we had, but have never been able until now to give anything like a complete history of the progress of the plan in the United States. Readers hereof know that many co-operative stores have been started here, but that most of them have failed in a very short time. The following statement is by N. O. Nelson, of Edwardsville, Ill., who is supposed to know more about the co-operative store movement than almost anybody else.—Ed.]

The famous twenty-eight weavers and Socialists of Rochdale, England, started the present successful co-operative store plan in 1844. These twenty-eight pioneers contributed $5 apiece in 4-cent weekly installments until they had $140. With this they bought staple groceries and retailed them at the full market price, for cash in hand, out of the little "Toad Lane Store," costing about a shilling a week rent. They had no hired help, and they found themselves possessed of about $200 when the first stock was sold. Every member received a token, showing the amount of his purchases, and at the end of three months he received credit on additional shares; on the shares he received interest. Non-members received half dividends in money.

The essential of this Rochdale plan, which has spread the world over, was cash payments and the profit going to the purchaser instead of to capital. This unique plan was noised abroad; neighboring towns started similar stores; it was self-contained and self-acting.

Jumping a period of seventy years, Great Britain's co-operative stores now have a membership of over three million, retail sales of $480,000,000 a year, manufacturing and wholesale business of $220,000,000, and annual net profits of $70,000,000.

The same principle has spread into practically all the civilized countries, not only in storekeeping, but in manufacturing, in farmers' business, in banking, and in insurance. The system is democratic; every member has the same vote, whether he holds a single share on which he has made a small initial payment or whether he holds the maximum shares allowed. Every member pays the same price in a store and gets the same price in a productive enterprise, and whatever profits are made he gets his share according to the amount he has contributed.

Roughly estimated, there are 50,000,000 members of co-operative associations, representing a population of 250,000,000. The plan has been spreading at an accelerating rate; it doubles itself, say, every ten years.

The Americas have lagged far behind Europe and the Orient in this movement, but there is a substantial start, and it is sure to come.

In the seventies the Patrons of Husbandry movement ran largely to co-operative stores; the country was full of them. The Patrons took the co-operative idea, but not the Rochdale plan. They sold on credit; they sold at cost; they limited the membership to a class. Any of these motives was obstructive; combined, they made success impossible.

Innumerable stores have been started from that time to this, but rarely on the Rochdale plan—always with some Yankee improvement.

At this date, as at any date in the past forty years, there are probably a thousand co-operative stores in the United States: a few of them are five years' old. They start with wrong ideas, without sufficient membership or capital or competent management, and, of course, fail. There are a number of stores in the United States fully established and prosperous, but probably not over 1 per cent. of those that have been started in the last forty or fifty years.

The Johnson County store in Olathe, Kan., is a notable survival of the Grange stores. It started in 1870, has always prospered, and is the chief store in that town or section; but, unfortunately, shareholding is limited to Patrons of Husbandry, and these gradually dying out, it has long been merely a joint stock company, earning large profits for its few and fewer stockholders.

There are a goodly number of co-operative stores in California, in Washington, in Minnesota, and in New England; but few of them are on the genuine plan; few of them save money for their members, and few of them are of any considerable age. Canada has about a dozen stores on the Rochdale plan, but only a part of them have succeeded in saving money for the members or surviving for any length of time.

In my own home town of Leclaire, Illinois, we started a co-operative store in 1902, strictly on the Rochdale plan. It has about 150 members, about $40,000 a year sales and regular dividends on purchases of 8 or 10 per cent., besides paying interest on its capital and accumulating a surplus fund.

After thirty years of active participation in promoting co-operation, I concluded five years ago to begin operations in New Orleans, without adhering to the Rochdale plan as far as starting was concerned, but aiming at the same purpose. I adhered to the Rochdale plan of buying and selling for cash, but, instead of selling at the full market price in order to accumulate capital, I sold at as low net prices as economical expenses would allow, and supplied the capital and management myself. I could see my way clear to undersell the current market prices about 25 per cent. The goods were sold and paid for at the counter, without any wagon deliveries. The first day's sales were $2.12; the first week's sales, $48; the sales of the ninth month, about $12,000 in the three stores then established. The sales of this year will be about one and a quarter million dollars.

At the beginning of 1915 I organized a co-operative association, made up of twenty thousand $5 shares or memberships. These can be paid for in any way down to 10-cent weekly payments; the dividend begins when the share is paid in full, at the rate of 7 per cent. annum. The association owns of the stores, a good bakery, a g creamery, a condiment factory, the stock and equipment on a re farm. It has a few more than t hundred employees. he conditions for catching the also vary greatly from season to on. The spring and fall are lly poor seasons, with gusty, able winds and high seas. The er weather, while steadier, also ighty poor for fishing.

Weather, however, is a very poor g to be dependent upon at any on. A sudden storm may prac- ly paralyze the fisheries for s, cutting off the entire supply resh groundfish. Receipts at Boston fish pier then may drop n hundreds of thousands of nds to a few hundred of pounds. dealers find the public demand- fresh fish just the same, but have no fresh fish with which upply the demand.

he inevitable happened. Up s the price of fish. And this is t apt to happen at the very sea- when the general public ac- ly needs cheap fish.

dicious use of the cold storage ld do much to alleviate this. There is no conceivable reason why the superfluous fish of a glutted market should not be put into cold storage, rather than be sent to the curing house of the cannery.

It is done with mackerel and with swordfish, two varieties of sea food only to be caught at certain short seasons of the year, and to a very slight extent with groundfish.

In the case of mackerel and swordfish, the freezer fulfills the function filled in the produce business by the hothouse, enables the well-to-do to consume out-of-season foods. For this reason there is a greater margin of profit in freezing these varieties, and naturally the dealers prefer to invest their capital in it.

Again, the dealers have found the public prejudiced against cold storage foods. Although they probably could not be told from the freshly caught article by one out of every hundred consumers, the name "cold storage fish" seems to stigmatize them as undesirable.

Nothing can do the work of nature so well as nature herself. Neither the hothouse, the cannery, nor the cold storage can be expected to turn out a product as fine as nature. But on the other hand, a half a loaf is better than none, and in these days when the average housewife is battling tooth and nail with the "high cost of living," the hothouse, the cannery and the cold storage product is not to be despised, but to be looked upon as a legitimate substitute for nature's work.

Through the cold storage alone can the public hope to have a steady supply of sea foods at a moderate price.

WITH THE EDITOR

A writer in "Printers' Ink," who has had experience with chain-store competition, thinks it is a good stimulus for any retailer, and says that when he goes into business again he will locate next door to a chain store if he can. Here is his argument:—

When Chain Store Competition Need Not Be Feared.

> Having last month been forced by ill health to sell what was considered a fairly successful retail store, I hope that I may soon regain my health and be able to open up another store somewhere, and the location I shall seek will be next door to a chain store if possible, for such a location is the best in the world for an independent merchant. Their sensational methods will pull the people down in that vicinity, and if you are an aggressive, live merchant, you will be able to get more than your share, and at much less advertising cost than otherwise.

In the course of a long article this man says that retailers fall down before chain-store competition because the chain store has the better of them in every one of the following points:—

1—Store system.

2—Quick stock turnover.

3—Intelligent buying—small lots, mostly.

4—Knowing exactly where to buy.

5—Proper inside display.

6—Cleanliness of store and employees.

7—Use of price tickets.

8—Intelligent use of shelving. High shelves are great accumulators of old stock.

9—Up-to-date advertising.

10—Keeping proper stock record and merchandise checking list; keeping the stock constantly full and complete.

11—Using the window and knowing what it is worth to the business.

12—Knowing what each clerk is worth to the business.

According to the "Printers' Ink" writer, the retailer who will buck up on all these things, and who has a good location—preferably next door to a chain store—need never fear the latter because:—

> The modern merchant who operates his store on scientific lines, combined with true courtesy and service, has no fear of chain-store competition. He can sell just as cheap in the majority of cases. He can have just as good fixtures and displays. He can learn merchandise and his trade's wants and operate just as cheaply as the chain store. He, further, has the human side to enlarge upon and can create good will to a much greater extent than can the chain store. He is also owner and boss of his establishment and can make quick decisions and changes when necessary, which the chain cannot do, as the manager is, in most cases, under the absolute control of headquarters, often a thousand miles away.

Perhaps this writer is a bit too enthusiastic in his conclusions, but there is a great deal in what he says.

The Complaint Against the Sears-Roebuck Sugar Scheme.

The charges of unfair competition which the Dubuque (Iowa) Retail Grocers' Association has filed against Sears, Roebuck & Co. will not get anywhere, in my opinion. As told elsewhere, the charges have been filed with the Federal Trade Commission, which is asked, under the new Federal Trade Commission Act, to say that selling sugar 33 pounds for $1 when bought with other things, is unfair competition. The association ar to the Commission that method of soliciting trade is a terfuge, a temptation or trick as the offer was contingent upo sale of other articles of qualit market value of which the chasers were commonly ignor

I grant all this, but neverth the practice is not, in my view, fair competition. The public is deceived. When a dealer o sugar at a ridiculously low and refuses to sell it unless o goods are bought too, he tell consumer very clearly that "I afford to sell sugar alone at price; you must buy some goods the profit on which will make up my loss." I don't be that anybody sees the transa in any other way.

But outside of this, the Fe Trade Commission Act was passed to let in such complain this. The Clayton Act, passed a the same time, really defines unfair competition is—no pa the definition touches this scheme at all.

The Honest and Dishonest Use of Trading Stamps

In last week's talk on "Do We Believe in Trading Stamps?" this paragraph appeared:—

> I am assuming, of course, that trading stamps are to be used honestly and fairly.

It is not questionable that trading stamps can be used honestly and that they can be used dishonestly. Fundamentally trading stamps are supposed to be given away. They are supposed to cost the consumer nothing. The merchant, as an inducement to more business, is supposed to pay for them out of his gross profits, just as he pays for advertising out of his gross profits.

Sometimes trading stamps are handled that way, and sometimes they are not.

Sometimes the consumer pays a high price for every stamp she gets. Sometimes the merchant makes a better profit with trading stamps than he did without.

Is that an honest use of trading stamps? It doesn't look like it to me—except under certain conditions.

A grocer is selling a Santos coffee which costs him 17 cents. He sells it without trading stamps for 26 cents, which everybody must admit is a satisfactory profit. He adopts trading stamps and gives twenty-five extras with every pound of that coffee. The twenty-five stamps cost him 5 cents. He raises the price of his coffee nine cents a pound—to 35 cents. I say that he has used trading stamps as an instrument to commit a fraud. Though his original profit was perfectly satisfactory, he has not only increased it enough to cover the stamps but four cents more.

I am absolutely against the use of trading stamps in any such manner.

But where an article has been selling at a loss, and conditions surrounding its sale seem to make it certain that it will continue to sell at a loss, then I justify the use of trading stamps in such a way as to make a consumer not only pay for the full cost of the stamps, but also to pay the fair profit on the article which it had been found impossible to get before.

Take Cream of Wheat. Even when it retails at 15 cents the profit is inadequate. Many retailers are forced by conditions over which they have no control to sell it at 12 cents, and any effort to get more than that for it would bring sour looks and biting remarks from customers.

I believe it to be perfectly justifiable to sell Cream of Wheat at any price, with trading stamps, which will leave a fair net profit to the merchant. If a consumer will not pay a respectable price for his goods, then it is right to trick him, if you like, into doing it. The law says that where A owes B money, B will always be upheld in compelling him to pay it by subterfuge—by devices which would be fraud were no debt due.

So with the consumer. He the merchant with whom he a fair and living profit on his g If he begrudges that and refus pay it, I should with a perf clear conscience use trading st or premiums to compel him to it. I would use his own gree other words, to betray him doing the fair thing. But re ber this—I should never go be that, because it ceases to be j fiable the minute it makes a factory profit better.

nks Standards of Quality Won't Work on Canned Goods

ers' Ideas as to Quality Vary Too Widely, and So Does he Average Quality of the Seasons. This Applies to Tomatoes, Corn, Peas and Other Lines. This Contributor Believes Packers Should Be Allowed to Pack as Poor Trash as They Like.

ave read considerable of the edings of the National Can- Association, particularly re- ng the need of more fixed ards for canned goods. Sev- speakers pointed out that the ng of canned goods to-day was ly a hit or miss business, with ontents of the can conforming most no standard whatever. e speakers made the point that e the advertising campaign is now in contemplation could ie industry any good, it must andardized. This could only ne, they thought, by adopting ards for the different products, requiring the label to conform em.

I have handled canned goods for many years, and I agree that if standards can be adopted, it would be a good thing, but I do not see how it is practicable. There are standards in existence now, but there is nobody to enforce them and no way of enforcing them.

Take tomatoes. To-day there are supposed to be four grades: extra standard, standard, off standards and seconds. Nothing appears on the label except occasionally the word "fancy." These standards would be sufficient if they meant anything uniform, but they do not and cannot. Every buyer of canned goods knows that one packer's extra standard is often another one's standard and often one man's standard is another man's off standard. Many times I have seen goods offered as standards which were really no more than a good second.

Could any fixed standard make all packers think alike as to quality? I think not.

Then another thing is the effect of the weather on the quality of a tomato crop. If I remember rightly the 1914 packing season, most of it at least, was perfect and the result was that finer tomatoes were never put into cans. The weather during the 1915 season was entirely different. It was exceedingly poor, and therefore the average of the 1915 pack was nowhere near as good as the average 1914 pack. The 1914 second, in other words, was as good as the 1915 off standard or even standard.

This is liable to happen at any time, and every time it did happen it would throw fixed standards entirely out.

Still another upsetting factor is the effect which processing often has on the quality of canned tomatoes, depending of course largely on the quality of the tomato itself. A certain South Jersey packer prides himself on packing very fine goods. Some of his tomatoes were rejected not long ago, and when he was told about it he was exceedingly wroth, saying that the goods were of the very highest standard and could not possibly be wrong. I opened a can. He said that if the evidence was not absolutely indisputable, he would not have believed that the packing was his. The processing had turned the goods to water.

What about fixed standards in a case like that?

All that I have said about tomatoes applies with equal force to corn, peas and other things. In the case of corn, one hour may make such a difference in the quality of corn that whereas one can may be the pick of the market, another of the same packing may be so hard and tough as to be scarcely fit to eat—not worth within ten or fifteen cents per dozen of the other. How can fixed standards cure that?

And as to peas, nothing runs more irregularly, either in size or quality. No packer, without very greatly increasing the cost of packing, could conform through a whole season with any fixed standard.

I used to believe a good deal more in standards than I do now.

There is enough trade waiting in your town, for nationally advertised goods which you don't keep, to substantially increase your business.

Why don't you look over three or four leading magazines every month and see just what is being advertised? Or, better, look over the compilation of "Goods That Are Being Advertised to Your Customers" that appear monthly.

Hitch your wagon to manufacturers' advertising.

THE ABOVE IS THE ADVERTISEMENT OF

I am inclined now to believe that the good packers would not be hurt if all standards were abolished, and every packer were allowed to pack as poor slop as he wanted to. He would very soon reach his proper level. Certainly a consumer stuck with a can of watery tomatoes or a can of tough corn, is not going to buy any more goods under that label if she can avoid it. You may be able to get away with poor quality goods in some lines, where you can cover it up, but you cannot possibly do it with canned goods, for it is impossible to conceal their inferiority. I would vote to let the cheap Johns go as far as they like, so long as they comply with the food laws. And I would expect to be rid of them in a very short time.

All past records of the Department of Agriculture are shown to have been broken during 1915 by a report of Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust, issued at the direction of Secretary of Agriculture Charles E. Patton. The receipts of the Dairy and Food Division for the past year were $279,055.40, as against $225,910.78 in 1914. This money is shown to be $193,154.04 in excess of the expenditures, which are provided for by a special appropriation. During the year the chemists of the department analyzed 8,939 samples of various foodstuffs and there were 1,165 prosecutions. In 1914 there were 4,827 samples analyzed and 1,010 prosecutions. There was a large increase in the number of oleomargarine licenses during the year, due to the vigilance of the field agents in prosecuting dealers selling without licenses. Violations of the pure food laws found through the analysis of the chemists and for which prosecutions were made in 1915 were as follows: Milk, 625; coffee and chicory, 2; cold storage, 76; eggs, 17; food, 176; ice cream, 41; lard, 8; non-alcoholic drinks, 76; oleomargarine, 16; renovated butter, 2; sausage, 25; vinegar, 101.

Does It Pay Grocers to Buy Future Canned Goods?

Well-known Canned Goods Broker Says It Pays Both Retailers and Wholesalers Because It Assures the Right Stocks at the Right Prices. Condemns National Retail Grocers' Association for Taking Contrary View. Recommends Retailers to Sell Futures to Consumers.

The officers of the National Association of Retail Grocers as well as the leaders in some of the State Associations of Retail Grocers, seem to have agreed upon or adopted as a policy the condemning of the buying of canned foods for future delivery. Their arguments opposing the practice seem to be directed especially against the speculative feature involved.

Their more important objections seem to be the temptation to over-stock, the tieing up of too much capital, the infrequent advances and more frequent declines, the failure to avail of the advanced prices in selling at retail, the restriction of credit and variety of stock owing to over-stocking in the one line.

It will be noted that all these arguments are based upon an abuse rather than a use of the method or privilege, and rather seem to reflect upon the average judgment of retail grocers than upon the method.

I maintain that retail grocers could and should in turn sell canned foods for future delivery to their customers, the consumers, by the quantity and stock them up for the season, thereby largely increasing the use of canned foods and their profits. If they do not the average housewife buys a lot of jars from the 10-cent store and a lot of stale fruits and vegetables from the hawkers, and some sugar at or below cost from the retail grocer, and proceeds to stock herself up for the winter at a higher cost and of poorer quality than the retail grocer could have furnished.

With assurances of my highest respect and esteem for the officers of the various retail grocers' organizations and their leaders in the formation of their policies, I protest against this opposition and assert that it is based almost entirely upon a consideration of price rather than quality, the latter being by far the more important consideration, and upon a disposition to belittle and discredit the commercial judgment of a large and overwhelming majority of their members, which is not justified by the conditions.

I hold that unless a commercial method is immoral or dishonest or of undisputed disadvantage to its members, which is not the case with the buying of canned foods futures, that the leaders of a great national commercial organization should not discriminate against and oppress a friendly manufacturing industry by condemning or denouncing a method or custom that is essential to the peculiar nature of its business and its continued welfare and progress.

Further, I have been told, but I am not going to be so presumptious or reckless as to charge it, that the strongest opponents among the leaders of retail grocers, of the buying of futures in canned foods, are themselves very heavy purchasers of futures in that line. They are however my excellent good friends and I do not propose to press this charge of inconsistency or to father it.

Speaking now of the advantage of future buying to wholesale grocers, when a wholesale grocer puts out canned foods under his own labels, the purchase and sale of futures by him is absolutely essential to getting the quality needed to supply to his customers, the retail grocers.

Selections of quality are hard to secure after the season has advanced a little, for canners do not and will not carry the goods and will sell out early.

Wholesale grocers are usually possessed of large capital and ample credit, and can well afford to buy futures in canned foods for their private labels and to carry the stock in order to obtain the choicest qualities and selections. They are also usually equipped with good warehouses and are therefore better prepared to take care of canned foods than are canners.

The selected or choicest qualities of canned foods as used by wholesale grocers under their own labels seldom decline and are neve over-supply. In fact they us become scarce and higher in as the season advances.

A wholesale grocer cannot to luck or to chance for a supp canned foods for his own la He must furnish his customers quality and cannot do so by chasing promiscuously of goods after futures have been livered.

r correspondent has been given of a long statement issued by wly organized Trade Association, ich Geo. B. Caldwell, president Sperry & Hutchinson Co., is the pears from this statement, which ch too long to reproduce, that ational Trade Association has very elaborate plans for opposing egislation as in the judgment of embers is not in the interest of in general. At present the asso- is on record in opposition to the is Bill and also to the Johnson oth pending in Congress, the lat- which requires the manufactur- me upon the label.

opposition to the Stevens Bill, would give the manufacturer the to fix retail prices, is thus ex- d by President Caldwell:—

The bill is exclusively in the rest of the manufacturer who places a trade-mark on his product and thereby brings himself within its provisions. The bill would enable him to retain a monopolistic control of his product and to dictate the price at which it should be sold to the consumer, even after he had parted with the title to the same and thus had obtained full payment therefor. If this bill should be enacted into law nearly every manufacturer would obtain a trade-mark for his product and thereby obtain a monopoly which would enable him to control the price of the same, even after it had passed into the hands of the jobber and retailer. This is manifestly unfair, as the manufacturer has it within his power to fix his price at the time of the first sale and then obtain whatever profit he is entitled to. It is certainly contrary to public policy to permit him to dictate the price after he has sold his product to the jobber or retailer and received full payment therefor.

2. This bill is contrary to the interest of the jobber and retailer. These distributors have fixed expenses in their business and they alone are competent to decide what prices should be placed on the articles which they offer for sale, and what rate of profit must be obtained to cover their expenses and leave a reasonable and just margin of net profit. The jobber and retailer are always subject to a strong competition and on that account are not able to obtain more than a reasonable profit on their sales. It often becomes necessary for the retailer to sell merchandise on a very narrow margin of profit or even at cost or less in order to meet pressing bills or clean up a stock which threatens to become unseasonable. How manifestly unfair it would be to force him to hunt out the manufacturers of his merchandise, especially if the width of the c ntinent separate them, and try to obtain permission to sell at less than the prices dictated by them. It would be practically impossible to obtain such permission from the manufacturers, and yet the retailers would feel compelled to cut prices for the reasons previously stated. As a result the courts might be clogged with injunction suits by manufacturers against jobbers and retailers in the endeavor to force them to maintain monopoly prices.

3. The bill is contrary to the interest of the consuming public. Regardless of how it might affect the interest of the manufacturer, jobber and retailer, it is certain that it would always compel the consumer to pay the maximum price which had been fixed by the manufacturer. He could never obtain the reduced price which would result from natural competition. At the present time many articles are placed on the market at reduced prices by the large retail stores in order to stimulate business or reduce stock. The consumer thereby enjoys the benefit of these price reductions. If the monopoly created by the Stevens Bill should become fixed by law, the public would immediately lose this valuable privilege and would thereafter be compelled to pay the monopoly price.

4. And, finally, the Stevens Bill is contrary to the spirit of our laws and the decisions of our courts. It has always been the theory of the common law that the channels of competition should be kept free and untrammeled. The Sherman Anti-Trust Law was enacted for the purpose of suppressing monopoly. In its interpretation of the Sherman law the Supreme Court of the United States has brushed aside every attempt at monopoly and has uniformly held that the channels of competition should be kept open to all. Why, then, should we reverse this wise and settled policy of free competition by enacting the Stevens Bill in the interest of a manufacturer's monopoly and against the interest of the jobber, retailer and consumer?

The National Wholesale Dry Goods Association is still issuing propaganda regarding fixed prices. During the week they have issued a long statement on the subject of fixed retail prices for underwear, the substance of which is that fixed retail prices ought to be abolished. They say that when the retail price is fixed on an article the retailer knows he cannot go above that and consequently insists upon buying his merchandise at a price that will yield him a profit at the fixed price. When the jobber has purchased the merchandise from the manufacturer at a figure which makes the fixed price too close, it is he who is the principal sufferer from the fixed price, because unless he can make a price which will net the retailer a profit, the latter will not buy the goods.

Naturally, the matter is being discussed from the standpoint of the wholesale dry goods dealer rather than the retailer.

The Wholesalers' Association accuses the retailer of being the principal factor in the fixing of retail prices, and does not put the blame on the manufacturer or jobber so much as on the retailer himself. The fixed price seems to be 25 and 50 cents per garment.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea quiet; unchanged in prices throughout the entire line. India-Ceylon firm.—Coffee quiet and unchanged for the week. Rio and Santos fairly steady, although Santos grades were a shade easier as the week closed. Milds quiet, but steady to firm.—Raw sugar weaker, but refined unchanged at 6.25 for granulated. If the lack of foreign business continues, the market will undoubtedly decline.—Spot canned tomatoes unchanged on last week's basis; the tendency somewhat easy. Other canned goods, both spot and future, in seasonable demand at unchanged prices. —Domestic sardines firm and tending higher. Imported sardines scarce and high.—Spot prunes feeling a little better in tone on account of clean-up of part of the stocks, but demand is moderate and prices no higher. Other dried fruits show no change for the week.—Wheat somewhat demoralized during the week and closes the week at considerable decline. Flour considerably below a week ago, probably 45 cents a barrel, due to demoralization in wheat.

Philadelphia R. G. A. Holds Largest Banquet Ever Held in Philadelphia.

Seats Eight Hundred People in Its Thirtieth Annual Function at Lu Lu Temple Last Wednesday. City Statistician Cattell Makes Characteristic Address. Copious Gifts of Souvenirs a Feature.

The Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association held its thirtieth annual banquet at Lu Lu Temple last Wednesday evening. It was the largest banquet ever held by the association, over eight hundred people participating. The new blood which has recently come into the association was considerably in evidence.

The proceedings were mostly informal. The association members and their ladies danced from 7 until 8, and then sat down at the long tables which completely filled the enormous room. The menu was elaborate and substantial, and an orchestra led the diners in rendering popular songs and supplied incidental instrumental music. About 10 o'clock Mr. Albert Kaiser, president, made an address of welcome and retrospection and introduced Dr. E. J. Cattell, City Statistician, who made one of his characteristic addresses. Dr. Earl Rice, a professional entertainer, caught the crowd with his clever Irish stories.

The guests were: Mr. Robert Stewart, president Association of Manufacturers' Representatives; Mr. H. A. Moore, secretary Association of Manufacturers' Representatives; Mr. G. W. Burnham, president American Specialty Manufacturers' Association; Mr. W. H. Rohr, secretary American Specialty Manufacturers' Association; Mr. Joseph Hall, Philadelphia "Inquirer"; Mr. Edward Gallen, president Frankford Grocers' Association; Mr. J. A. Edgar, secretary Frankford Grocers' Association; Mr. Oliver Stout, president Frankford Grocery Co.; Mr. A. W. Mattis, president Retail Grocers' Building and Loan Association; Mr. Elton J. Buckley, attorney Retail Grocers' Association; Mr. C. W. Zieber, secretary Retail Grocers' Building and Loan Association; Dr. E. J. Cattell, City Statistician; Mr. Frank Diamond.

Mr. W. N. Ross was chairman of the Banquet Committee, and the other members were Reno Schoch, secretary; Charles K. Dewees, O. A. Patterson, George W. Murgatroyd, Geo. K. Sinnamon, J. W. Batman, H. W. Fisher, A. Kaiser, F. B. Farley, assistant treasurer.

A notable feature of all the Philadelphia Association banquets, including this one, was that every one of the more than eight hundred diners received a huge bag of souvenirs, presented by manufacturers who wish the association well. These were as follows: Airline Honey, Borden's Condensed Milk Co., Beech-Nut Packing Co., Walter Baker Co., Buffalo Cereal Co., A. Colburn Co., Corn Products Refining Co., Curtice Brothers Co., Diamond Match Co., Ekenberg Company, Franco-American Food Co., Franklin Sugar Refining Co., Freihofer Baking Co., B. Why a Manufacturer Should Be Permitt to Fix the Retail Price of His Product

Views of Various Believers in This Doctrine Who O Them as Arguments for the Pending Stevens Bill.

[The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has obtained and will from time to time present a series of statements by various well-known persons who believe that the manufacturer should have the right to tell the retailer what price he must get for the manufacturer's product. All of the views which will be presented can be taken as arguments for the pending Stevens Bill, which seeks to give a manufacturer that right.—ED.]

No. 14.—By O. J. Moore, Sioux City, Iowa.

A party appeared before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at Washington recently, as I learned from the newspapers some time since, and said that the matter of making up, or I might better say overcharging, on certain other goods to make up deficits made by the cut price on certain advertised goods was not a matter of practice in the trade. I wish to say that that is not true. In the affairs of our own business, for instance, we run the business, or we subdivide the business, into certain departments, and as one department is found to produce a lesser profit than is necessary to take care of fixed charges, we are invariably obliged to raise the profit on other departments.

One thing that makes our position most harassing and undesirable where trade-marked articles are used as baits is this, that it has been the custom all during these years where business was run on that basis to instruct salesmen to make good on every individual order the cut price given on the trade-marked article, and that practice grew to an extent where the salesman was finally congratulated where his overs exceeded his shorts, and I know of instances in the past where an over and a short sheet was run in the house and the salesman instructed to mark overs with one distinction and shorts with another, and the amount of the cuts was kept t of during the week, and amount of the overs kept track and the difference between the either suggested the amount the fellow gave away net or gain in theft that he took fro merchants by conducting his upon a basis of misrepresent

Before You Sign a Specialty Order

We are hoping that this advertising will bring you where your attitude toward specialty goods will be this: That you will ask before you sign the order, first, "Do I want these goods?" and second, "Will the order bear the specialty stamp?" And that your answer to the first will depend somewhat on the answer to the second.

As a general proposition, no merchant ought to sign an order which he does not sincerely intend to take. Therefore we include that as one of the questions he should ask himself before he signs. But we make the further point that even when he has the very best intentions toward the order, he should still ask himself whether, without the stamp, he should sign it.

As a matter of fact, this point may arise but seldom, for it is very unusual to find a leading manufacturer to-day who does not use one of the above stamps.

A Grocers' Cyclopedia.

San Diego, Cal., Feb. 24, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—During the years 1907 and 1908 you were collecting information about how and where all foodstuff was made or prepared, put up, etc. The articles would come out in the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World." Your intention was to condense all of this information into book form for the benefit of your grocery and provision manufactory trades. Now I would like to get just such a book.

Yours truly,

Two Queries Answered.

Mifflinburg, Pa., Feb. 17, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Do you consider the Grocers' Fire Insurance Co. of Huntington safe and sound?

What do you think of the American Grocers' Society, Newark, N. J., and their stock proposition? You must buy four shares of stock at $17.50 each, or $70, and then send check with each order for the goods you purchase before you get the goods. Their story seems all right if they are reliable and a store could soon make their $70, as they claim to sell at 10 per cent. below the jobber's price. Please advise us on this. We have not yet invested; we want to wait on your reply.

Can any firm refuse to sell a retailer, saying that he has an agreement with another store in the same town not to sell? We sent in our order to the house and, as we had never bought anything from them before, so as not to delay we sent them a certified check and they wrote back that they were sorry, but they couldn't ship. That is kind of a monopoly of trade, and isn't it against the law?

Now please answer this but do not publish our name in your paper.

Yours.

The Grocers' Mutual Fire Insurance Co. of Huntington, Pa., is all right so far as we know.

Our objection to the scheme of the American Grocers' Society, as frequently expressed in these columns, is that they have sold certain specialties at remarkably low prices which it would seem they could not possibly continue, as a bait to sell stock, and that once they got the grocer on their subscription list, they intended to ask him to push their private brands, for which of course there would be no demand. And if as it appears, they cannot continue the low bait prices on specialties, and were compelled to withdraw them, the grocer-stockholder would be left with nothing for his money but the chance to push private brands. Certainly the company could never earn dividends by selling specialties at jobber's cost.

The Brenard Manufacturing Co.

Freehold, N. J., Feb. 16, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Can you furnish us with information concerning the Brenard Manufacturing Co. of Iowa City, Iowa, as to their plan and if it works out as they represent? Have you ever seen one of their contracts?

Thanking you for any information you may be able to give us, we are, Very truly yours,
CHAS. MOUNT & Co.

Our complaint against the Brenard Mfg. Co. is that it induces retailers to give it promissory notes and then transfers them to an innocent (?) third party for value received. The latter collects them by law, as he can do, whether the Brenard concern has carried out its contract or not. In the Brenard contract the notes are spoken of as "acceptances," to get around the unpleasant sound of "note," but they are simply ordinary promissory notes.

To Make Gloves and Jobber Selling Consumers.

————, Pa., Feb. 22, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Can you tell me where to find a firm or firms that handles dies and machinery for making canvas gloves, also where to buy material to make same?

I have been informed that Eiseman & Son, of Philadelphia, ship groceries at wholesale prices to private parties in our town. Can you suggest a remedy?

Yours, * * *.

To get dies see A. Nacke & Son, 236 South Ninth street, Philadelphia. For glove-making machinery, Singer Sewing Machine Co., Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia. For glove material, Miller, F Beyer & Co., Tenth and Fi streets, Philadelphia.

As to the Eiseman case, if believe that no jobber has the r to sell to consumers, no matte what quantity, the remedy is tc quaint other retailers who a with you of the facts, and thei them use their own judgment a whether they should patroniz jobber who sells over their he But first you should have pos knowledge that Eiseman & Son selling consumers.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Popularity versus Business.—Popularity is largely the result of a good digestion and a cheerful mother. It's a case of come easy, go easy. The popular clerk is generally good-natured. He may not be a moneymaker. He may not be much of an executive, but he's there with the smile and the accommodating spirit, and he figures strongly in the business.

On the other hand, give me the business chap—the fellow that's on the job, maybe with an occasional grunt and an abrupt answer once in a while, but still—business. He counts. He is the one that keeps things to rights. He hollers. With him a spade's a spade. If things don't go right he's up in the air. He plays a far bigger and far more important part in the affairs of general business than the smiler.

He isn't liked, but somehow or other he manages to draw the bigger salary. Think this over. Popularity versus business.

... Baking Powder Guarantee.

...iladelphia, Pa., Feb. 21, 1916. ...e Editor.

...ar Sir:—Some time ago I or-... from the Manhattan Baking ...ler Co. cocoa and baking pow-... I received bill No. 1 a few ...s ago, but did not feel satisfied ...guarantee on bill. I wrote to ... stating that I would not sell ...oods unless they would send ... guarantee that would comply ...the National and Pennsylvania pure food laws. I received bill No. 2 this morning, also a letter, which you will find enclosed.

Please let me know at once what to do about it.

Very truly yours, N.

The Manhattan Baking Powder Co., 264 Spring street, New York City, are not listed in the mercantile rating books nor do they seem to be known to competitors. This means either that they are very new or very weak. We have also looked them up in other trade directories, but do not find them. This may or may not mean that their guarantee is worthless, but naturally the guarantee of a house known to have standing and responsibility is of more weight than the guarantee of a house that nobody seems to know.

We have looked over the letters which they sent you, also the invoices.

The guarantee under the Federal Food and Drugs Act is rubber stamped on the invoice as follows: "All articles contained in this invoice we guarantee to conform with the requirements of the Pure Food and Drug Act of June 30, 1916." This in our judgment is insufficient to protect you. It is not this guarantee which you will most need, as the baking powder and cocoa will have to be removed from the original package and will therefore come under the Pennsylvania State laws. The guarantee of conformity to the Federal Act is not sufficient to protect you in Pennsylvania. You must have a guarantee which explicitly warrants under the Pennsylvania Food and Drugs Act. This they have apparently meant to give you in their letter of February 17th, which says, "We will guarantee the goods ourselves to agree with all the pure food laws of your State." This is all right as far as it goes, but it might be difficult to prove what particular goods they were guaranteeing, in case trouble arose. Therefore they should write or stamp the same wording upon the bill which they give you. And of course there would still be the question whether the concern is financially responsible and could be held to its guarantee.

Investing in a Rubber Tire Concern.

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Feb. 22, 1916. To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Will you please give us some information in the next issue of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" about the Zee Zee Tire and Rubber Co. They offer stock at $12.50 per share and the stockholder is entitled to 20 per cent. rebate on tires off list prices.

Thanking you in advance, we are,
Truly yours,
A SUBSCRIBER.

The Zee Zee Tire and Rubber Co. is a small Philadelphia concern which makes. we believe, pretty good tires, but which has not yet acquired any very large financial standing. Its tires are very high-priced, and the 20 per cent. rebate to stockholders would still leave you paying a rather high price for tires. You say the 20 per cent. is from list. Plenty of dealers will sell you Zee Zee tires or any tires at pretty nearly that discount from list, whether you are a stockholder or not. We advise not buying their stock. Considering the upset condition of the world's rubber markets, and the terrific competition in the rubber tire business, we regard it as a very poor investment.

An Employment Agency.

East Bangor, Pa., Feb. 21, 1916. To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Have been a reader of your paper for some time and have come to you on several occasions for information which has always been so well looked after. Am coming once more, although it may not be in your line.

What is your opinion of an employment agency?

Would you consider it a good proposition in a city of 75,000 to 100,000?

What proceedings would be necessary to get started?

Yours, * * *.

We see no reason why an honestly conducted employment agency in a town of 75,000 to 100,000 should not be a very good proposition. It would have to be honestly conducted—many employment agencies are pure frauds—and it ought to be freely advertised. You must get a license from the State to run an employment agency and pay a license fee of—we think—$50.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week. Business is excellent at prices which are steadily maintained, but show no change from a week ago.

Coffee.

The coffee market is unchanged for the week, speaking of actual coffee. Options are slightly easier, but there is no indication of any important decline or for that matter, advance in actual coffee. All grades of Rio and Santos are the same as a week ago. Milds are steady to firm and are unchanged for the week. Java continues scarce, firm and tending higher. Mocha unchanged and quiet. The consumptive demand for coffee is moderate.

Sugar.

The sugar market is practically unchanged from a week ago. Raws are perhaps a little easier on account of lack of demand from the refiners, and also on account of the expectation that the foreign demand in the near future will decline. Refined sugar is unchanged from a week ago; demand fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged for the week. Compound syrup steady to firm, moderate demand. Sugar syrup continues very high and not very much wanted. Molasses unchanged and quiet.

Fish.

Norway mackerel is steady to firm. Some demand, apparently for Lenten purposes. Some holders are asking a small advance for the week. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and steady. Salmon is still selling rather actively at unchanged prices. Domestic sardines are still firm, particularly mustards, which are scarce. Imported sardines scarce and firm.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are about as they were a week ago; certainly the market is no firmer. Plenty of Maryland 3s can be bought f. o. b., in a large way, at about 5 cents below the top price. Futures are unchanged, but firm. Corn and peas unchanged and in seasonable demand. This applies both to spot and future. Apples show no change and light demand. California canned goods continue steady to firm on the coast on account of light stocks. In Eastern markets the demand is fair and prices unchanged. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged and dull.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are unchanged from last week, the situation being still somewhat easy in Eastern markets. The coast is unchanged. Peaches are still selling very low in spite of the efforts of holders to boost them; sales made during the week were undoubtedly below the cost of production. Apricots unchanged and quiet. Raisins, currants and other dried fruits unchanged for the week; fair demand.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans are unchanged on last week's basis. The undertone seems fairly strong. The demand fair. Marrows are still inclined to be slightly easier, although prices made no material decline for the week. California limas unchanged and dull. Green and Scotch peas quiet and unchanged.

Butter.

There is an active consumptive demand for all grades of butter. Receipts continue to be light and the market is firm at 1 cent per pound advance over last week. The quality arriving is good for the season. A continued good market is looked for for some time, but not much change in price.

Eggs.

The receipts of eggs are increasing as the season advances and the quality is very good. There is an active consumptive demand that is absorbing the receipts on arrival, and the market today is about 1 cent per dozen lower than it was last week. Not much change is expected in the price in the near future. The price is about normal for the season.

Cheese.

Cheese steady at unchanged prices, with a normal consumptive demand. Stocks are reported to be very light, owing to recent shipments abroad. The conditions are not likely to change in the near future.

Provisions.

Everything in the smoked meat line is steady at unchanged prices, with a moderate seasonable consumptive demand. Both pure and compound lard are dull, but firmly held at prices ranging the same as for the past week. Barreled pork, canned meats and dried beef are very slow sale, with a light consumptive demand. No change in price is expected in the near future.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Spices.

The market continues very active and still unsettled. Many articles are very much higher than prices in effect last week. Changes have been rapid and higher values are predicted on many articles.

Pepper.—The situation is a critical one. There is not sufficient pepper here to meet the urgent demand. The embargo by the English Government has further complicated matters. We look for very high prices on pepper over the year. Many predict that the laid down cost will reach 24 to 25 cents.

Red Peppers.—In very large demand and are distinctly firmer. In our opinion this is to be a year of extreme prices.

Cloves.—Practically unchanged and in fair demand.

Pimento (Allspice).—Very much firmer and higher prices are now being quoted. Demand very good.

Mace.—Exceedingly scarce and futures are again active for all grades, prices being very much higher.

Nutmegs.—Stocks here are unusually small and have rapidly changed hands of late. We have had some startling advances during the last week and higher prices are predicted.

Cassias.—China grades very much higher; freights and the unsettled political conditions in China all contribute to the change in values. Spot stocks here are unusually short. Saigon grade also scarce and in normal demand.

Gingers.—Futures are all very active. Prices, however, are unchanged generally.

Tapiocas.—Are very firm and prices not likely to be lower for many months.

Paprika.—Market steady and firm. Stocks here are very small. Present import cost figures higher than prices prevailing in our market.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—Nearly everything in the list is active and in urgent demand. Prices have greatly advanced. Caraway and poppy, as well as mustard, higher and likely to reach record figures. Sage, thyme and tumeric are also very firm and in active demand, with an upward tendency.

McCormick & Co.
Baltimore, Md.

Imported Fish Specialties.

There has been a further improvement in the mackerel market. During the last week several important parcels have changed hands and prices for practically all grades of Norway mackerel are from $1 to $2 higher than they were last week. Fours and 5s are getting quite scarce, and hardly any further supplies may be expected Norway, as stocks seem to be tically cleared. If the present de continues, it looks very much a stocks held in first hands woul cleared before Lent starts.

The herring situation is uncha and prices are certainly high en so that there is no need of adva them any further. It is only na that the high price of herrings res the consumption.

Now just what do you k about that? Isn't that big white? These people think n about doing business on the stra clean plan they talk about in t ad., than they do about getting benefit out of it for their own b ness. Great Scott, but that seem big and fine to me! They "don't puff Ferris meats," but going to all the same. I can't saying that the goods of a con as big as this are goods that e first-class store ought to have.

We believe we know how to sell Tea just as advantageously to our customers as we sell Harisco Standardized Coffees.

As evidence of it, read this from a letter received the other day from a dealer up New York State:

Your tea at 28c. is the same I have been paying 35c. for.

That comes from being right in the heart of the market and knowing when and how to buy.

Take our advice and keep your Tea stocks up just now. The market is forging up, freight space is scarce and war insurance high. Several tea cargoes have been sunk. You ought to carry enough Tea to last three or four months.

Sunday in a Country Town.

I'm writing this on the table of a little old country hotel about half way between Philly and Pittsburgh, and I'm sore—dead, clean sore to the bone. It's the holy Sabbath day.

I'm sore because I had to lay over here on Sunday. Of all the God-forsaken holes on earth, a little country town's the God-forsakenest on Sunday when you ain't got a home there.

You can bet I wouldn't have been here if I hadn't got a letter from the house just when I was starting home, to lay over so as to be at some place bright and early to-morrow to see some fellow about his opening stock.

I'm to be the early bird! Hah! Hah! (sarcastic laughter) Hah! Hah! I look like an early bird, deed I do, and I'm supposed to get a worm to-morrow morning.

Well, the early bird deserves to have worms. I ain't ever studied to be an early bird and I don't believe in 'em.

I ought to be home, that's where I ought to be. It's a rotten day, snowing one minute and raining the next.

It's cold in here, too. Dodblast it! Unless I change my mind, I'm going to write this and then commit suicide.

There's two other strange gents staying at this hotel besides me. One of 'em's a horse dealer, come in for a sale to-morrow, and the other's another salesman, selling farm machines. They're both as happy as I am, although the horse chap's asleep over there in a chair by the stove. He just got up an hour or so ago.

This is the life!

I just saw a customer of mine go by to church. He was all shaved up and had a little green hat on. Why don't I go to church? Oh, I snore too loud. I got put out of the last church I went to; that was in the winter of 1846.

I've got four customers here in this town and I could have gone to all of their houses to dinner if I'd had a clean collar. The only collars they seem to sell here are horse collars and they don't fit me good. My tie never looks right with 'em either.

The only trouble with going to customers' houses to dinner is the way I affect their wives. Honest, it ain't my fault. It ain't my fault I'm good looking, is it? How can I help it if the women all fall for me?

I stayed at a customer's house all night once, and honest cross me heart, when I got up the next morning my pants was gone. His wife had stole 'em so's to keep me with her longer. How could I help that?

I don't want you to get any idea I'm down on country towns. Gee whiz, I spend most of my time in 'em—I ain't down on 'em at all. But to spend Sunday in one—holy cats, it's the almighty limit. In a place like Philly there's a million things to do. You don't want to stay in your home, even if you've got one. And maybe there's a few things you can do in a country town in summer. If there's a creek you can go get a boat and fish, or go somewhere on a trolley. But in winter!

I've never been able to see why the Sunday meals at a country hotel should be so rotten. This place where I am now—gee! Me and the horse gent had breakfast side by side. I had country sausage drowned in about a quart of grease gravy. The sausage couldn't swim and had gone down for the last time when it got to me. It give a weak little bark when I fished it up, but never come to right.

"Country" sausage! The only country that sausage ever saw was Chicago, I'll bet. Right there in a country town with farms all around, too. And with every one of my four customers selling the real stuff. How can you dope it out?

I took a walk around the place before I started in to write this. Nothing open but the drug and a couple of cigar parlors. blamed place might have be deserted village. Everybody homes was in 'em. If some had put a window up just went by and shot me dead, I'd thanked him.

Not even a movie open. pity the poor salesman in a co town on Sunday!

I did think of going to some day school this afternoon and ing my bright and happy voic the children's songs, but I g I won't. When they see me g into places like that people siz up as a bum come in to get war something. That always make mad. I ain't stylish, but I a bum. Wish I was, then I

No. 2.

Dear Sir:—Your account with B. A. Merchant is long past due. You have not even extended us the courtesy of replying to our letters. Really, Mr. Delinquent, we can't understand your actions in this matter.

We don't want to be over bearing about this account, nor work a hardship on anyone, but you surely can do something toward paying off this account by now. Even if you can't do that, you can let us hear from you. We have tried to treat you fair and square in this matter, Mr. Delinquent, and we shall expect as much in return. It is not compulsory that you pay the entire amount at one time, but it is imperative that you "start the ball to rolling."

We want to see you get this bill straightened up, and we know you will feel better when it is.

Let us hear from you within 10 days, Mr. Delinquent.

No. 3.

Dear Sir:—Are you honest, Mr. Delinquent?

We want to know.

Most people are honest. Most people expect to pay for what they get. Most people have self-respect.

You don't want to be classed with the deadbeats, do you?

The deadbeat is not honest. The deadbeat does not expect to pay for what he gets. The deadbeat has no self-respect—not even enough to support himself. He wants to live off of the grocer, the landlord, the clothier, the physician and others.

The deadbeat thinks he is sharp and shrewd. He is a fool. He beats himself to beat others. You never saw a deadbeat prosper.

If you are not a deadbeat, you don't want people to think you are. The best thing for you to do, then, is to answer this letter at once. Tell us when we may expect a settlement, or at least a partial payment.

Show your honesty! Be a man!

Here is a New Egg Preservative.

Fred Lewis Foster, formerly agricultural editor of the San Jose "Mercury-Herald," and now operating an apple and pear orchard in the Santa Cruz Mountains, with a poultry plant as a side line, vouches for the excellent keeping qualities of this formula for preserving eggs. The ingredients consist of beeswax and salad oil, either cottonseed or olive oil. Melt about three ounces of beeswax and mix with one cup of salad oil and stir until about the consistency of lard, adding oil if too thick and wax if too thin. Use only guaranteed fresh and infertile eggs. Rub the shells thoroughly with the mixture, pack in egg carriers and store in a cool, dark place. This mixture will treat about 45 dozen eggs.

No. 352.—Legal and Illegal Substitution.

I find considerable ignorance among business men of all classes, and this is perfectly natural, as to their legal rights when it comes to a question to substituting one brand or kind of goods for another. Substitution is practiced in all lines of business, both wholesale and retail. Not all of it is done maliciously, however. Sometimes it is done with a deliberate intent to knock out a certain brand, but probably just as often it is done merely because the brand ordered is out of stock and the next best thing is sent.

There is well settled law that governs all such transactions, some of which are legal and some absolutely illegal. I shall try to point out the difference in this article. I may as well say that this is inspired by a decision which the United States District Court at New York has just handed down in a substitution case. The plaintiff was the concern that makes Congoleum, a kind of oilcloth, and the defendant was the J. B. Greenhut Co., who have a department store in New York City. The oilcloth firm accused the department store of substituting other oilcloths; of accepting orders for Congoleum and sending something else; and of working all the plans which are usually worked to switch business from an article one does not carry, or does not wish to carry, to something else. After the case was heard the court handed down the following decree for injunction:—

> That the defendant, Greenhut Co., Inc., its servants and employees, and each and every one of them, and all persons claiming through or held under the defendant, are forever enjoined and prohibited from selling or offering for sale, directly or indirectly, any floor covering as Congoleum, unless the same is in fact the genuine; and from selling and delivering in response to orders that are specifically for Congoleum any floor covering other than the genuine Congoleum; and from representing, directly or indirectly, that any floor covering is such Congoleum unless, indeed, such floor covering is in fact such Congoleum.

From a casual reading of this it would appear as if a retailer was so completely tied up by it that he would have to sell Congoleum or nothing, but that is not the case. Below, in brief, are the things he must not do. They are also the things that no retailer can do in any case, for the above decree merely states the settled law:—

1—He may not sell—let us say—Bengal oilcloth and call it Congoleum.

2—He may not even leave his customer under the impression that Bengal oilcloth is Congoleum, if he sees the customer is under that belief.

3—He may not receive an order for Congoleum oilcloth, and without saying anything about it, fill it with Bengal.

But all these are fraudulent methods of substitution. They really amount to obtaining money under false pretenses, and of course they should be stopped. The whole subject is really condensed in the following extract from a leading case:—

> It is the duty of every trader not to dress up his goods or market them in such a way as to cause confusion between them and the goods of some other trader. If there is any chance of confusion he must accompany his use of his goods with affirmative distinguishing features sufficient to render deception improbable.

In other words, he must explain to his customer that he is getting Bengal instead of Congoleum. There are many cases in which merchants have gotten into trouble for failing to do this. In some cases they have gotten into trouble when they thought they were taking every precaution. There was the famous Baker's cocoa case. The original Baker is Walter Baker & Co. Another one—W. H. Baker & Co.—started in business a few years ago, and immediately litigation began which lasted several years. In the course of it a retailer got in the toils who thought he had been very careful. A customer had asked for Baker's cocoa. He told her there were two Bakers, and she, not knowing the difference, asked for the best. He gave her W. H. Baker's cocoa. The court said he had no right to do that—it was illegal substitution.

It makes no difference if the article used as a substitute is as good or even better than the original; it is still illegal substitution if it comes under the above principles.

There are cases which go so far as to hold that a dealer who represents that his article is substantially identical with another's, though the names are different, is liable to have an injunction issued against him. But there are limitations to this doctrine. No man has a right to say: "Here's the same thing under another name," unless it is literally the same. The fact that it is practically the same, or very similar, does not justify him. But it would be entirely legal to say "Here is the same kind of a thing under another name."

Of course none of the above principles touch the manufacturer or dealer who merely tries to get his customer to switch his order to something else. There are cases on the books which show that occasionally the owner of a brand has been foolish enough to think he could prevent a merchant from even arguing with a customer to take one thing instead of another. He has tried to stop him from doing even that, but he has invariably failed. The law is that merely persuading a customer who calls for particular goods that other goods are just as good or better doe constitute illegal substitution.

This Tells the Tale

¶ A product which has been on the market fifty-eight years is a product which has stood the hardest of all tests—the test of time. "Knight's Cooking Extracts" is a phrase familiar to man, woman and child, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Lakes to the Gulf. It is easy to tell why; no housewife ever had a bottle go back on her and no housewife ever will. Good extracts must be on your shelves. Grocers, if you sell Knight's Extracts we need say nothing more to you; if you don't, we want one order from you—we are sure of more. You are certain of their absolute purity and a good profit.

The first Pure Food Show held under the auspices of the Retail Grocers' Protective Union closed on Saturday night, and it was a big success. The show was held in spacious Motor Square Garden, situated in the East End. The hall was splendidly decorated and every space was taken. Among the exhibitors were several of the manufacturers in the Pennsylvania Plan, as follows: Franklin Sugar Refining Co., who occupied one of the largest spaces. Joseph Tetley Co., who demonstrated Tetley's Teas. The Diamond Match Co., who had a handsome booth and who showed the making of the Safe Home Match from start to finish. H. O. Wilbur & Sons had a magnificent exhibit of their products and it was conceded by all to have been one of the most imposing of the many exhibits, as no expense had been spared to make it attractive. The space ran from aisle to aisle and was really a model cooking school in charge of a capable teacher of domestic science. Wm. Wrigley, Jr., Co. contributed to the success of the show by providing a large number of free samples of their goods to be used by the committee as an "extra." The entire affair reflected great credit on the management and the exhibitors declared themselves as well pleased with the results.

MOLASSES
How it is Made

Sugar and molasses come from the sugar cane, sugar being the main product and molasses the by-product. In the United States most of the sugar and molasses is made in Louisiana, where there are 200 sugar plantations. The big ones occupy as much as 1500 acres of ground, but there are many small ones which grow the sugar cane and sell to the plantations which have sugar-making plants.

The cane is planted in November and February and harvest time is the short period from mid-October to late December. It is a strange fact that the cane in this country will produce for just two years, whereas in some countries it will produce for as long as twenty years.

Sugar cane looks like cornstalks and grows to a height of about 9 feet. It is cut by hand and the leaves and tops cut off, then taken to the sugar house. There it is placed on endless belts which carry it to the crushes, three big rollers. It passes through the first set and on to a second set, thus all the juice is extracted, dropping into tanks underneath.

Now the cane juice is clarified, and impurities removed. Then it is ready for boiling. Most planters boil in big vacuum pans which produces the better sugar. Some boil in open tanks, which produces better molasses. In either way boiling of the juice goes on until crystalization sets in. Then there is part liquid, which is molasses, and part crystals, which are sugar. At the proper point this boiling is stopped and the semi-liquid mass is put into Centrifugal machines to separate the molasses and sugar.

The Centrifugal machine consists of two big pots, one within the other, the inside one made of screen. Into it is poured the semi-liquid mass. The machine revolves rapidly and the molasses is thrown through the screen into the outer pot and the sugar remains in the inside one, thus the molasses and sugar are separated

This makes what is called "Firsts" molasses and "Firsts" sugar. Some reboil this molasses and the same process of boiling and separating is repeated and thus "Seconds" molasses and sugar are obtained. Each time that sugar is extracted the molasses becomes darker in color, heavier in body and stronger in flavor.

When boiled a third time the sugar is so fine in grain that it cannot be separated by the Centrifugal machine. So the semi-liquid mass is put into tank wagons and stands from late fall until the following April, when the sugar has deposited and the molasses can be drawn off. This makes "Thirds" and represents the lowest grade of molasses, which is commonly called Blackstrap.

Our New Orleans molasses is what is known as "Firsts" in the above article and is boiled in the open tanks. There is no higher grade of molasses. The price is 18 cents a quart or 70 cents a gallon

SAGE AND SULPHUR DARKENS GRAY HAIR

Brush this through faded, lifeless locks and they become dark, glossy, youthful.

Hair that loses its color and lustre, or when it fades, turns gray, dull and lifeless, is caused by a lack of sulphur in the hair. Our grandmother made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to keep her locks dark and beautiful, and thousands of women and men who value that even color, that beautiful dark shade of hair which is so attractive, use only this old-time recipe.

Nowadays we get this famous mixture by asking at any drug store for a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which darkens the hair so naturally, so evenly, that nobody can possibly tell it has been applied. Besides, it takes off dandruff, stops scalp itching and lalling hair. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also brings back the gloss and lustre and gives it an appearance of abundance.

Long ago I made up my mind that this sort of advertising does not pay. Perhaps I ought to qualify that. There is no objection to it, and it may fit in very well, done once in a while. But done very often it would be, according to my experience, money thrown away. Consumers don't seem to be much interested in matter of this kind. I believe they will usually pay more attention to it when it is served up frankly as advertising, as for instance, if Mr. Goetzmann had used a large display advertisement headed something like "Two Kinds of Molasses and Our Kind." To be followed with a much shorter talk on molasses making and the application to your own brand. All such matter ought to be boiled way d to the limit, however, for it is enough to get consumers to re even at best. I imagine tha going over this article of Goetzmann's with a blue pencil, haps a third of it could be nated without doing any vi to the text.

Don't Buy Baking Powder on Price

You can get a baking powder at almost any price you want to pay. You can get a baking powder that will yield you possibly a couple of hundred per cent.—if you can sell it.

But in the end you will be sorry you did not send out Rumford to represent you, rather than the cheap brand whose only attraction was the profit it offered.

Rumford is clean, wholesome, honest, substantial, satisfactory merchandise. It brings the customer back for more of it, and it pays you well for your work. There is no better leavener than Rumford Baking Powder.

Are You Selling All Your Customers Cereals?

If Wheatena isn't a regular part of your cereal stock, you probably aren't selling cereals to some of your trade at all. They are apt to be your best trade, too.

Wheatena seems to appeal particularly to good, substantial, well-to-do people. They use it year after year—you never have to sell them. We guarantee it no matter whose hands it is in.

This Man Believes in Bonuses to Clerks on Increased Sales

Says It is the Only Way to Make Salesmen Go the Limit in the Interest of the Store. Not Only Makes Business But Makes Profits.

It has always been a mooted question whether it was a good thing to offer retail clerks a bonus on sales as a special inducement to salesmanship. The chief objection urged against it has always been that it was apt to make nuisances out of the clerks. Mr. S. A. Sanderson, of the well-known Western retail firm of Rudge & Gunzel, Lincoln, Neb., makes an argument for giving a bonus to clerks on increased sales which we are glad to publish:—

Large jobbers, manufacturers and retailers all over the country are using the commission or bonus system in some form or another for the payment of their most efficient salesmen, and many of the best thinking salesmen could not be hired on a straight salary.

Many conscientious merchants who want to deal fairly with their clerks and pay them what they honestly earn, hesitate to raise salaries in a good year for fear that a poor year will come along and wipe out all their profits, and many a reactionary hides behind this same question as an excuse. Why not, then, pay them for results attained? So that the employee shares with the employer the chances incident to business and earn a larger or smaller amount, according to the sales or profits are larger or smaller? All realize that an employee should deliver 100 per cent. energy when they sell their services, without any additional stimulus in the way of a commission or bonus. But do they? D. yours? The average clerk on a salary of $15 a week will in time become neglectful in the matter of introducing new goods (the best and surest way of increasing sales) and be satisfied if his sales run $300 per week. Estimating that he is costing the house 5 per cent to sell, suppose you try offering this same clerk 3 per cent. bonus on all the sales above $300 per week, provided that is the basis you figure his drawing account on and see if he does not use his time and ability to better advantage.

It is especially desirable first and all the time to develop the best there is in your salespeople—to have them thoroughly believe that "the house" desires to treat them fairly and compensate them for what they deliver. The more sales the more gross profit—the less expense, the greater the turnover—the more net profit, therefore the more money in the pay envelope. You raise the objection that clerks sell customers what they don't want or need, or too much of what they do need because there was a P. M. on the same. It is a poor rule that has no exceptions or objections. Some pay clerks $1 a day and 4 per cent. of all their sales, on the same basis as a gas company charges 50 cents per month for readiness to serve and then makes a lower rate per foot for gas, or as a measured telephone service. Although an eminently fair principle, some of us do not like same on account of extra trouble. We are all human. If you know that at the end of a certain period you are to get a bonus for having sold a given amount, it's only natural to rustle to make the limit.

If the salesperson actually has the firm's best interests at heart all the time they may deliver 100 per cent. energy or efficiency, but how much more apt they are to do so if some incentive is held out. Doubtless all of you remember how, in your boyhood days, you tied a small mop of hay on a long stick a few feet in front of the old horse's nose in order to "speed him up." P. M.'s often speed up the slow selling merchandise, remnants, odd lots, etc., which must be cleaned out to make room for the new merchandise. Bonuses are something paid for introductory sales—that is, selling something besides what the customer asked for.

Pay the salesperson what he can earn and give him the opportunity to demonstrate his earning capacity by putting him on a percentage basis and see if the results do not justify the trouble and effort. Bonuses are a good speed-up proposition, but if you use them be sure you have good control of your brake and don't let the machine run away with you.

Probably the fairest way to pay commission to salespeople would be to take their last year's salary and figure what the cost of selling was; that is, what per cent., use this as a basis and then pay a commission on all sales above that amount.

If you have your business divided into departments and expect to have your department heads share in the result, why not make them share in the net profit rather than pay a commission on sales. This will stimulate them to get better prices. Keep up the gross profit. This commission should be figured after taking into consideration the average stock carried, the turnover, interest on the average stock and then pay a good sized commission on the real profit.

Thirty Years of McCray Refrigeration.

Over thirty years ago E. E. McCray commenced building refrigerators under the McCray system—patented a short time prior by his father, Hiram McCray. The McCray patents were founded on the idea that in order to have perfect refrigeration it was necessary to have a perfect circulation of air inside the refrigerator.

Mr. McCray advocated the principle that has since come to be recognized by all manufacturers of refrigerators, that cold air of itself does not refrigerate and that in order to have perfect refrigeration it is necessary to have cold, dry air that is constantly in circulation. This is the same principle by which a flowing stream purifies itself. A stagnant stream of water soon becomes foul and filled with impurities.

The McCray system of refrigeration is based on the principle that cold air descends and warm air ascends. The cold air, descending from the ice compartments, passing through the food compartments beneath it and under the partition at the bottom, is forced upward through the other food compartments and through the opening in the middle partition at the top of the ice compartment, where all moisture and impurities are condensed on the cake of ice and carried away through a water sealed drain pipe.

On this great principle of refrigeration the success of the McCray Refrigerator Co. has largely been built, but Mr. E. E. McCray did not stop with the perfection of a system that gave perfect circulation of pure, cold, dry air.

The McCray experts have investigated the requirements for every kind of refrigeration. They have devised scientifically constructed refrigerators that meet every requirement of grocers, meat markets, hotels, clubs, restaurants, residences, public institutions, hospitals, florists, confectionery stores, etc., and a line of refrigerating display cases that are recognized as standard throughout the world.

Starting with a small, poorly equipped plant at Kendallville, Ind., over thirty years ago—firmly resolved to build a better refrigerator than anyone else—the business of the McCray Refrigerator Co. has grown steadily until day its output is the greatest in vol of any refrigerator concern in world, and the McCray is recogni around the world as the standard quality and efficiency.

E. E. McCRAY,
President, McCray Refrigerator Co.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can possibly sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Women Will Confirm This

There are other washing helps beside Chase-O, but every other has some weak point. One distributes the bluing unevenly, another gums the clothes up with paraffine, and so on.

Chase-O is an absolutely perfect product. It will cut the work of washing in half. We would be exceedingly foolish to make this statement if it wasn't true. Try Chase-O yourself, and then tell your customers what it did for you. Used with boiling water and a little soap. Nickel a box and good profit.

There May Be Too Much of a Good Thing

No grocer can deny that specialties fill a more important place in the average retail grocery store to-day than they ever filled before.

Every day or so the grocer is approached to order specialties, and every day he is going to become surer that it will pay him to order and handle specialties.

But if he were to order one-tenth the specialties he is asked to order, he would have to move his counters out on his sidewalk—there would be no room for them in the store.

Specialties should be ordered with care and discrimination. One ironclad rule should be adopted:—no specialty order should be signed unless they bear one or the other of the above stamps.

How a Retail Grocer Increased His Business Sixty Per Cent. in Five Years

Actual Description of the Plans Used, of Which the Chief One Was Special "Weeks." Phenomenal Results From Orange Week, Apple Week, Coffee Week and So On. The Window a Great Factor, as Are Systematically Made Inside Displays.

Winning trade for the grocery is the biggest job connected with the retail grocery business. It is the one thing that ought to be the foremost thought in the minds of both the employer and employee, for it is upon this one thing that both are dependent for a living. It matters not how good a buyer you may be; how good a system of bookkeeping; or any of the other important adjuncts you may have, without trade you would be compelled to close your doors. While these other matters are of great importance to the success of any grocery, the problem of increasing the store's sales is the greatest with which the grocer has to deal, and if he is to succeed he must be alert all the time, looking for and working out new methods.

We believe we have been very successful in winning trade for our store, having increased our sales over 60 per cent. in the past five years (our increase for 1915 alone was $10,000).

I am going to give you a few of the things and methods that proved the most successful to us in increasing our sales.

One of the things to which we have given credit for our large increase is the fact that we handle and push national advertised goods; they save us time in showing goods and explaining their merits, for the manufacturer has done this for us through his advertising. National advertised goods give perfect satisfaction—the manufacturer guarantees the quality. When a woman steps into our store for the first time she feels perfectly at home because there upon the shelves, in displays, etc., are goods which she sees and reads about in nearly every one of her magazines, and instead of feeling like a stranger in a strange land she feels at home and she receives a favorable impression of our store on her first visit and she is quite certain to come the second time, providing the prices and service are in keeping.

We also put a personal guarantee upon every article we sell; every purchase must be right, if not we make it right and we never argue with a customer. "Our customers are always right."

One of the big factors in winning trade for us is the window display. Next to good goods and good employees, the window display is of great importance in winning trade for the grocery. Its importance cannot be overestimated.

While we have always been believers in good window displays we never appreciated their value quite as much as we did this fall, when we were putting in a new front at our store. The Saturday before we started to put in the new front we sold 16 bushels of peaches in 15-cent baskets, each bushel made 12 to 13 of these baskets, or a total of 208 baskets. We kept our window full of these baskets. As soon as any were taken out we refilled it. A great many people in passing saw the fine peaches at 15 cents per and stopped to buy. The majority of them never would have stopped had it not been for the "display of peaches." On the following Saturday we had our front all torn out, but although there was nothing to hinder the people coming in, we sold only a little over four bushels of peaches, or about 70 baskets, losing us more than $30 worth of business on peaches alone, to say nothing of the other articles we might have sold had we been able to get the people into the store.

We have two windows, one in which we display fruits, vegetables, etc., and the other we use to display canned goods, bottled goods, etc. The fruit and vegetable display is changed daily in order to keep the fruit and vegetable on display fresh and bright. It is far better to leave your window empty than to leave fruits and vegetables in until they become rotten and shriveled up. This kind of a display will stop people from coming in even if they had no intention of buying fruits or vegetables.

The other window is changed at least once a week. During the summer months it is changed twice a week. Both are always washed at the time of changing. In this window we display goods we advertise or are making a special on. We also keep watch of the magazines and display in this window the goods that are being the most extensively advertised. We also use price tickets upon every item displayed in the windows. I think that grocers lose a good many sales by not having the prices upon the goods displayed.

We always endeavor to be the first grocer to display the first strawberries and watermelons in town, also other goods such as peaches, etc. This affords us a good bit of free advertising.

Another way we have used to win trade for our store, probably the most successful way we have ever used, is by conducting "Special Sales Week." They have not only proved very successful but very profitable. Last January we thought we would like to increase our sales $10,000 for 1915. This meant an increase of over $800 per month, and if we were to succeed we knew that we would have to do something that would create more business than we had ever done before and that each month would have to make its own increase or we would fail, for if one month were to fall down it would be too large an increase for the following month to make up along with its own increase.

By the middle of January we saw that if that month was to make its share of the increase we would have to get busy. Judging from the amount of apples we were selling and the extra low prices prevailing at that time we thought it would be a good time for an "Apple Week." We purchased our apples in 25-barrel lots, not thinking we would sell over 50 barrels at the most. We drew up an ad. and had it appear in all our local papers three days in advance announcing "Apple Week" at our store. We had a large banner painted in three colors which made it very attractive; this was hung across the front of the store on the outside. This sale proved very successful, selling 128 barre It brought people into our st that had never been in before an enabled us to sell other articles t were not on sale. We had peo to drive 15 and 16 miles to buy o apples. This sale gave January h share of the increase and show a very substantial profit.

The "Apple Sale" proved so su cessful that we decided to set asi one week of each month as a sp cial period during which sal efforts were to be centered upo some one particular seasonable ite or number of items. During 19 we held ten special sales weeks, o each month excepting June an July. We skipped these tw months because we were kept bu handling the berry crop. Eve one of these sales were winner with the exception of one, wh was a "Pineapple Week" (fresh held in May, and its failure may b accounted for by the fact that it wa extremely hot weather, and wome will not can fruit during the ex tremely hot weather. But thes sales proved so successful that w are going to put on two each mont during 1916, three of which hav already been held, and if the bal ance of them prove as successful a these three did 1916 will be by f our largest and most succes year.

Following I am giving a few o these special sales and results s you can see what they are:—

In February we held an "Orang Week." During this sale we sol 375 pecks of oranges, to say not ing of the many other articles th sale enabled us to sell, also 80 doze grapefruit.

In March we had a "Coffe Week." This sale sold us 45 pounds of coffee.

In April we put on a "Raisi Week." This special sales cam paign resulted in the sale of 30 packages raisins, 302 loaves of rai sin bread and 115 dozen raisin cookies.

In August a "Peach Week" was held, selling 1050 baskets of peache and this sale brought in a goo many new customers.

In November we put on "Canned Pineapple Week." This sale was a winner, selling 82 cans of pineapple. This was more pineapple than we would have regu larly sold in four years.

In December we had a "Candy Week," selling over 2,300 pounds

You Can Now Get This 35 Horsepower Panel Delivery Car for $695

This is the world's record $750 Overland —with an improved motor—at a reduced price.

No car of its size ever sold as fast as this—50,000 of this chassis were sold in six months.

All the overhead expense, all the development expense and experimental cost that are usually spread over a year were absorbed in half the usual time.

So, though we improved the car, we reduced the price.

And the result is a value absolutely unmatched or even approached by any other car.

We guarantee that the price for this model will never be lower.

But material prices are advancing and we cannot guarantee that it will not be higher.

Better see the Overland dealer now and place your order at once.

of candy, this being fully 1,300 pounds more than we ever sold during Christmas week.

These special sales have won us more trade than any other method we have ever used.

Another way we have used in winning trade is by following up our window displays with good inside displays. Special effort is put forth to induce the store visitor to make extra purchases. While the window display may bring a customer in to the store to purchase some article, it is up to the inside display to induce him to make extra purchases.

We have a display counter upon which we display goods which have just been received or which we wish to push, and we find it a wonderful help to us in increasing our sales. We will have as high as 10 or 12 articles displayed upon it at one time, all marked with a price ticket and some few remarks in regard to it. When a customer comes into the store and has ordered all she has on her list, we propose that she look over the goods displayed upon this counter; we impart to her all the knowledge we have of these articles and invariably sell at least one of these articles and often as high as 8 or 9. This counter comes in handy when a customer comes in and does not know what she wants.

Do you know if you can sell each customer that comes into your store 25 cents worth of goods more than they had any intention of buying, and you wait upon an average of 15 each day, figuring 300 working days per year, that it means an increase of $1,125? And if you employ five clerks and each does the same it means $6,000 increase a year. Surely that is worth the little extra effort it takes to do it, for it doesn't take much salesmanship to sell each customer 25 cents worth.

It pays to be thoughtful. Many times a customer leaves your store undecided, when by merely suggesting some seasonable article a sale would be made. We sell all we can while the opportunity is with us; we don't let any sales slip by us by failing to suggest some seasonable article or something on which we are making a special effort. Use your initiative in not letting any thing get by you and your efficiency will be increased as well as your sales. Thoughtfulness in suggesting articles that may be just what the customer wants, but doesn't know it, is real salesmanship. It will increase your sales.

We often open different kinds of canned goods and let the people see and sample them. The extra sales more than repay us for the can opened, to say nothing of the repeat orders we get. We have opened canned pineapple and let the people see how it was packed and to sample it; it was surprising the number of people who had never tried canned pineapple before buy a can though the display.

We have increased our sale during Lent by displaying Lenten goods, such as salt mackerel, canned salmon, sardines, etc., in an old show case out on the sidewalk. People passing by noticed the show case and stop to examine it; they are influenced by the display to make a purchase. It makes us a good many sales we would not otherwise make.

Why a Manufacturer Should Be Permitted to Fix the Retail Price of His Product

Views of Various Believers in This Doctrine Who Offer Them as Arguments for the Pending Stevens Bill.

[The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has obtained and will from time to time present a series of statements by various well-known persons who believe that the manufacturer should have the right to tell the retailer what price he must get for the manufacturer's product. All of the views which will be presented can be taken as arguments for the pending Stevens Bill, which seeks to give a manufacturer that right.—ED.]

No. 15.—By H. E. Sloan, Secretary Missouri and Kansas Wholesale Grocers' Association.

These trade-marked articles as they apply to the wholesale grocery business represent quite a percentage of our output, but they are a class of merchandise which is billed to the wholesale grocers at a price, less a certain trade discount. In handling such articles, except where we, ourselves, are manufacturers, we are considered by the manufacturers as distributors rather than as merchants. The manufacturers bill to us, for instance, at a price of, say, $4 per case less 10 per cent., and the 10 per cent. represents the distributor's margin of profit; and the manufacturer issues a jobbers' selling price list, which controls, if they have the privilege of enforcing it, the resale price to the retailer. In the case of laundry soaps, for instance, the resale price is graduated according to quantity sold; thus, if the list price of a single box is $4, the list price in 5-box lots would be $3.95 and the price in 10-box lots would be $3.90, while the jobber gets a 10 per cent. discount from the single-box price.

Most of these trade-marked goods are put upon the market and popularized by the force of advertising at a heavy expense to the manufacturer, and the jobber's interest in the protection of a resale price is largely in the interest of the manufacturer. The very life of a trade-marked article depends upon the continued demand for it and the service given in its distribution, and as the margin allowed the jobber is small, and if these goods are cut in price and demoralized to such an extent that the jobber cannot afford to handle them, his interest wanes and his efforts are directed in trying to force the sale of something to take the place of them in order to protect him in the proper sort of margin for the service rendered, and in meeting this obstacle it retards the free movement of the goods, renders much of the work and expense of the manufacturer nugatory; works a hardship on him which could be obviated by his right to control the resale price without detriment to the consuming public.

There are a number of articles, such as tobaccos, soaps, lye, cereals, and breakfast foods, etc., which are heavily advertised in the leading periodicals and newspapers constantly, being brought to the attention of the people morning, noon and night; and possessing undoubted merit, they eventually become known as staples in our business. Now, these articles are pounced upon, one by one, by differ houses to be used as leaders, a the prevailing price is slaughter because being well known the disguised intention is to establ the belief in the minds of the knowing consumer that all goo handled by such houses are sold the same manner and at a like c which we know is not true.

But when these trade-mark articles are slaughtered for a ce tain length of time and the pri is forced to a point of actual co and sometimes below, the jobb and the retailer begin to look f something to take the place a which will permit of a living profi and it is not unusual to find t popular trade-marked article e tirely driven out of a market fo other reason than that some pi in trade wished to show that could undersell his neighbor. W claim this is not fair, nor is it goo for general business, nor is it c any material or ultimate benefit the consumer, but on the contra it is simply the exercise of a licens to murder an established staple bu up at a heavy cost.

Now, we are in this position a jobbers, so far as these trade marked articles are concerned: W are in the position of either buckin the sale of them or we are in the sition of being forced to han them, distribute them to the trade and participate in the demoraliza tion to the extent that it robs us any opportunity to be fair and t preserve regularity in the distribu tion of our goods. In other wor if we are forced to handle a certa amount of that character of good we have got to make our losses u on something else. We are already large philanthropists in the distri bution of the great staple, sugar and the more of these articles w handle for nothing the greater we must strive to get a larger profit— a higher price—on controlled brands, private brands, and the great volume of goods for consumption with which the consumer can not possibly be familiar, such as canned goods, coffees, teas, rice, beans, spices, and many others which can not be identified by the retailer or the consumer, but which must be made to pay the loss sustained.

The sugar business, so far as the jobber is concerned, does not pay any proportion of the cost of handling it, to say nothing of a profit. In other words, we can not cart, de-

Speak to customers about

WILBUR'S COCOA

You'll find Wilbur's Cocoa so well known and well liked that customers are practically waiting to buy it, and all you need to do is remind them of it. Wilbur's Cocoa has been extensively advertised for many years, and once tried its superior flavor has always given satisfaction.

Our booklet "Cook's Tours Through Wilburland" shows consumers 60 ways to use Wilbur's Cocoa—as a food as well as a drink. Wilbur's Cocoa can be made into delicious cakes without the use of butter, which is only one of our recipes; it makes the most delicious Iced Cocoa, and our recipe for that is the only successful way of making it.

To make a long story short—once you start a customer buying Wilbur's Cocoa it means steady repeat sales at a good profit to you and satisfaction to her. That is the kind of articles you want to sell, because they build up permanent trade.

It will pay you to keep Wilbur's Cocoa displayed on your counters and in your windows at all times.

WITH THE EDITOR

Fine!

In an official code of instructions which the Corn Products Co. gives to its salesmen appears the following:—

> Do not overstock any man. Be very conservative. It is difficult to gauge things accurately, and it is desirable that nobody be short of Karo; but remember that it is better that your customers be sold out and looking for further supplies when you call again than that they should have too much left and thus feel that they bought too liberally on your first round. Put yourself in every dealer's place and strive to get his viewpoint. You want to make a friend of each one and get his confidence; for you can build lasting business only on confidence, and confidence does not come unless it is merited.

How fine this is! Yet there is nothing intentionally generous about it. It is business entirely. The point of the whole thing is what is for the best interests of the company. Yet the company's attitude shows that it is after all perfectly possible in a business deal to take an attitude which shall be equally advantageous to both parties. It used to be considered inevitable that what helped one man hurt the other, and the old rule was to help yourself as much as you could. It was a bad rule and a false one, as this plan of the Corn Products Co. shows. For what that concern is doing certainly helps the dealer in that it saves him from a burdensome overstock, and it certainly helps the company, for it make it friends instead of enemies.

Fat Witted Ignorance.

Some poor fat head has introduced into the New York Legislature one of the most ridiculous and revolutionary bills that it has ever been my curious fortune to see. It purports to be a food bill for the protection of the public, and first requires all canned goods to be dated with the year, month, day and hour of packing. That is foolish enough in itself, for it has been many times shown that a dating bill would have no effect except to kill the sale of canned goods more than one year old, though they may be better than the current pack.

But the dating feature is nothing compared with another feature. When canned goods become two years old, under this bill, their sale is prohibited, they are confiscated, and the packer is compelled to redeem them in new goods, which I add, may be grossly inferior to them.

It demonstrates nothing to call names, but I cannot deny myself the pleasure of observing that the man who conceived this bill has the head of an ignoramus and the feet of a jackass. What outrageous rot it is! Really it is a waste of time to discuss it at all. I shall not discuss it, beyond saying that it would serve the fool public right to pass a bill like this and see the price of canned goods go up.

A Sharp Lesson.

A few days ago I saw a report which an efficiency expert had rendered to a merchant who had employed him to find out why his business wasn't prospering. The report offended the merchant very deeply, but he was sensible enough to ignore that and accept the thing for what it was worth.

The paragraph which caused the offense was as follows:—

> In conclusion, I see no reason why this business should not be increased. The location is good, the class of merchandise carried is well fitted for the location, the store system is economical and there are no leaks which I was able to find. The sole reason which I am able to suggest may account for the failure of the business to increase is that the personality of the owner, through no fault of his own, is not pleasing to customers.

None are so blind as those who will not see. The merchant referred to above had evidently refused to admit to himself that he was not a pleasing person. He had certain physical peculiarities which need not be gone into here, but which would make practically everybody want to be waited on by somebody else. In spite of this he insisted on being active in the store—mingling with customers. The inevitable result was that he drove trade away and was himself the chief obstacle in the path of every plan adopted to increase the business.

I was greatly impressed several months ago by an article written by the "Stroller," about a merchant who had seen that customers did not like him to wait on them, and who, instantly acting on his knowledge, resolved to keep away and devote himself to other things.

Three Mistakes in Regard to Cost.

Most readers hereof know that there is in Washington a new trade body called the Federal Trade Commission, which was created by the Federal Trade Commission Act of last year. Its main purpose is to prevent unfair competition, but its activities seem to be widening beyond that, and it is apparently working with a sincere idea of helping and standardizing business. Already it has seen what all other students of business conditions have seen, viz., that one of the weaknesses of business as now conducted is the ignorance of thousands of dealers as to their cost of doing business. The following is an extract from a bulletin which the Commission has just issued:—

> In January the Commission published a four-page leaflet containing a statement by the vice-chairman regarding tentative plans covering two instances in which the Commission believed it might be of service, by indicating means by which business men may improve their credit standing and by improving accounting practices and establishing better standards of bookkeeping and cost accounting. The Commission calls attention to the advantages to be derived from the employment of standard systems of accounting by the various classes or groups of commercial and industrial interests, advising the adoption of such systems, however, only where it was apparent that the system then installed failed to give adequate information or could not be economically operated.

This paper and other papers cannot say too much to help this cause along. There are still merchants in business to-day, successful too, some of them, who have no idea what it costs them to do business. They merely add to the cost of their goods a percentage which they consider large enough to cover expenses and a profit. And maybe it is large enough, and maybe it is too large. Also, it may be not large enough. Even if experience has seemed to prove that it large enough, it is neverthe a slipshod way of doing bu ness.

Other retailers have made ca ful calculations as to their co and follow the results of those c culations religiously, but their f uring is wrong. Their compilatio have been unscientifically do Men of this class are just as bad off—perhaps worse off—than the of the first class.

There is still another class merchants who have read that costs the average retailer 17 p cent. to do business, and who ha accepted those figures for the selves without investigation. O retailer who did this, and who nev seemed to get ahead although he d a good business, was induced prove up his 17 per cent., and four that his cost of doing business w nearly 21 per cent. For years h had been netting about 4 per cen less than he thought he was netting which in some cases meant nettin a loss instead of a profit.

If I were a retailer and could any way afford it, I should emplo an accountant to go over my boo and tell me what it was costing m to do business. If it was too muc I would cut it down, if I could But I would know.

No Free Sugar This Year.

Acting upon instructions of the Democratic caucus of the House, the Ways and Means Committee on Tuesday reported favorably the Kitchin Bill to repeal the "free sugar" provision of the Underwood Tariff act. Following a short executive session of the committee, the bill was reported with this recommendation:—

> The free sugar provisions of Paragraphs 177 and 178 of Schedule E of the Tariff Act of October 3, 1913, provide that on and after May 1, 1916, sugar, tank bottoms, syrups of cane juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses, molasses, sugar drainings and sugar sweepings, maple sugar and maple syrup, glucose or grape sugar, and sugar cane in its natural state, or unmanufactured, shall be admitted free of duty into the United States.
> The proposed bill repeals the free sugar provisions of existing law. The effect of its enactment will be to leave the present rates of duty on sugar and kindred products in full force and effect.

nited States Court Says Nobody Can Be Prosecuted for Violating Government's Standards of Purity w Highly Important Factor Introduced Into Federal Food and Drug Act by Chicago Court's Decision in Case Against Thompson & Taylor Spice Co. Court Says Law Prescribed No Standards and Nobody Else Can Do It.

A new factor has been introduced o the enforcement of the Fed- l Food and Drugs Act. In a se tried in Chicago by the Gov- rnment against the Thompson & ylor Spice Co. for selling adul- ated peppermint extract and lterated orange extract, the rt ruled that as the law itself scribed no standards of purity food products the Govern- nt was without the power to scribe any and nobody there- e could be convicted for selling ods which were not in con- mity with Government stand- rds.

There has always been more or s uncertainty as to the standing of standards of purity and strength opted by the Government. The law itself prescribes no standards, but it does give to certain officials which it names, authority to make rules and regulations for carrying the law into effect. Several United States courts have already ruled that this includes the right to make standards, and that the Government standards will therefore have all the effect of law unless it can be shown that they are unfair. The decision now made in the Thompson-Taylor case upsets the situation, and will undoubtedly be carried to the United States Supreme Court by the Government, which—if the decision is generally adopted by other United States Courts—will be helpless where the basis of its case is violation of standards.

The case against the Thompson & Taylor Spice Co. was based on the charge that the company had sold a peppermint extract containing less than 3 per cent. of oil of peppermint (the Government standard) and orange extract containing less than 5 per cent. of oil of orange (the Government standard). At the outset of the case the point was raised that the Government had no right to make standards, therefore failure to conform to them was not illegal.

The court, after exhaustive argument, held that a person cannot be punished under the Food and Drugs Act for violating the standards of circular 19, standards created by any public officials, standards erected by custom or otherwise, because the act itself does not in terms provide for any standards, nor does it adopt any existing standards or delegate to any one the power and authority to create such standards. The court, therefore, directed that a verdict be entered finding the defendant not guilty and the defendant was accordingly discharged.

The court throughout adopted the construction contended for by counsel for the defendant, who argued that Congress deliberately omitted any provision whereby to enforce any standards of strength for such products as flavoring extracts and contended that the courts cannot by judicial legislation supply such a provision; that the standards established by the Secretary of Agriculture in circular No. 19 carry with them of course a very great moral force and many States —Illinois recently included—have adopted food standards in conformity therewith, but that so far as interstate commerce is concerned, the adoption of such standards must rest upon the voluntary consent of the manufacturer or dealer and not upon any mandate of law.

Dry Goods Business Still Ahead.

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:—

Current wholesale distribution of dry goods has been in excess of the corresponding period of a year ago.

Road sales for immediate shipment are in greater volume than a year ago, and continue heavy for later spring and fall delivery.

Customers have been in the market in greater number, and their house purchases have been heavy.

Collections are normal.

Pennsylvania Consumers Are Asked to Buy Stock of "All Package Grocery Stores Company."

New York Chain Store Concern, Selling No Bulk Goods, With Fifty-three Stores Already Operating and Twelve Hundred More in Prospect, is Circularizing Pennsylvania to Sell Stock. Expects to Introduce Private Brands.

The latest investment scheme to be offered to the consumers of Pennsylvania is the stock of the "All Package Grocery Stores Co.," of 217 Broadway, New York City. The literature of the scheme, most of it exceedingly well and expensively printed, is being circulated over the State, the immediate object being to sell the 7 per cent. preferred stock of the company, which carries a 200 per cent. bonus of common stock. Consumers are supposed to buy 20, or 40, or 80 shares, payable so much per month. There is a lot of guff in the literature, such as the numbering of each booklet in red, and the statement that only 240 residents of Pennsylvania will be allowed to buy blocks of 20 shares, only 180 permitted to buy 40 shares, and only 100 permitted to buy 80 shares.

With the literature comes a list of the stores already established in New York City, numbering 53.

The All Package Grocery Stores Co. is rated $100,000 to $150,000 and becomes important to everybody, as it proposes to do a mail-order business as well as to open 1,250 stores through the entire East. From an exceedingly long description of its scheme we have prepared the following summary:—

In the All-Package stores, all food products are in sealed, sanitary packages, which are plainly marked as to the net weight. You know that the food is clean and wholesome, because it is weighed automatically by machinery at the company's wholesale house, and in this process of weighing, packing and sealing, human hands do not touch the food.

And the clerks are in white uniform. Their courteous manner is a result of the training they receive at our Merchandise School.

Once every week All-Package store managers, clerks and errand boys go to the company's school, where they are taught merchandising, window display, salesmanship and how to please customers. All promotions are made from the ranks, and these clerks of to-day will become the All-Package store managers of to-morrow.

All store managers are under bond. They are made financially responsible for the good in their store, which are charged to them at the selling price, and when inventory is taken, once a month or oftener, they must have either the goods on their shelves or the money equivalent in the bank.

There are no losses through bad accounts, as all goods are sold only for cash. There are no losses from overweight; all goods are sold in sealed packages—the net weights of which are guaranteed.

The first All-Package store was opened on April 10, 1915, at 767 Flatbush avenue, Borough of Brooklyn, Greater New York. In twenty-four weeks from the day it was opened, its weekly sales had grown from $162.31 to $735.15, an increase of over 450 per cent.

Just take a look at the record of this store's weekly sales:—

Week ending April 17th (the 1st week)	$162 31
Week ending May 8th (the 4th week)	216 76
Week ending June 5th (the 8th week)	373 37
Week ending July 3d (the 12th week)	518 31
Week ending July 31st (the 16th week)	445 55
Week ending August 28th (the 20th week)	600 02
Week ending September 25th (the 24th week)	735 15

By January 25, 1916, nine months after the first store was opened, forty-nine additional All-Package stores had been opened in Greater New York. When the average sales of each of these newer stores have had time to grow to $735.00 a week, the first fifty stores will be doing business at the rate of more than $1,900,000 annually.

Beginning with the month of February, 1916, the company plans to extend its business by opening three or more new stores a week, and to increase this schedule gradually until it is opening a store a day.

The All-Package plan provides for a chain of 1,250 retail stores. These retail stores will be located in the principal cities and towns of the Eastern and Central States, with a central wholesale house for each unit of 125 or more stores. The rural population of these States will be served by parcels post, express and freight from the company's nearest wholesale house.

The mail order department of "All-Package" is becoming a most important feature of the business. The All-Package idea of putting all food products in sealed, sanitary packages, plainly marked as to the net weight and guaranteed as to quality, makes shopping by mail as convenient and satisfactory as personal shopping.

The "All-Package Weekly," a publication which contains information of interest and value to housewives, and which quotes lowest prices on All-Package pure food, is mailed regularly each week, to all customers of the company who reside in the rural districts and who find it more convenient to do their purchasing by mail than in person. The All-Package Grocery Stores Co. is incorporated with an authorized capital stock of $25,000,000, consisting of 500,000 shares of 7 per cent. cumulative preferred stock and 2,000,000 shares of common stock, both of the par value of $10.

Both the preferred and common stock are full-paid and non-assessable, the preferred stock being preferred as to assets and dividends.

This authorized capitalization provides for a total of 1,250 All-Package retail stores, with a central wholesale house for each unit of 125 or more stores.

The preferred stock is being issued a little at a time, as fast as the company can use the capital for the opening of additional stores.

An issue of $200,000 of preferred stock is now being allotted to 520 residents of Pennsylvania, in order to extend the company's business. With each share of preferred stock of this issue is given, as a bonus, two shares of common stock.

The present issue of $200,000 of 7 per cent. preferred stock, which carries with it a bonus of two shares of common stock with each share of preferred stock, is being allotted to 520 residents of your State in the following manner:—

Two hundred and forty residents in Group A will get twenty shares each of preferred stock at $10 per share (for which they will pay $200) and in addition, 40 shares of common stock of the par value of $10 per share, which is given them as a bonus.

One hundred and eighty residents in Group B will get forty shares each of preferred stock at $10 per share (for which they will pay $400) and in addition, eighty shares of common stock of the par value of $10 per share, which is given them as a bonus, and

One hundred residents in Group C will get eighty shares each of preferred stock at $10 per share (for which they will pay $800) and in addition, 160 shares of common stock of the par value of $10 per share, which is given them as a bonus.

This totals 520 residents—$200,000 of preferred stock—$400,000 of common stock.

The All-Package Grocery Stores Co. is now selling a complete line of groceries, household specialties, toilet preparations and candies.

About March 1, 1916, the company will bake and sell a 10-cent loaf of bread for 5 cents. Its new wholesale house at Bush Terminal is equipped with a most modern, sanitary and automatic baking plant, which has a capacity of 18,000 to 20,000 loaves of bread a day.

If our sales were confined to advertised brands of goods, on which the retail price is regulated by the manufacturer, we could not cut prices and make large profits. But our sales are not confined to advertised brands.

While we carry in stock nearly all advertised brands which are standard, over 50 per cent. of our total sales are in our own private brand of foods—"All-Package" Brand—and this is where our big profits come from.

For example: A twenty-ounce package of Quaker Oats costs 8 cents at wholesale, and if we sell it at 8 cents retail, we make only our cash discounts on purchases in large lots. We do sell Quaker Oats; we also sell All-Package Oats—identical in quality—at thirty-two-ounce package for 8 cents on which we make over 25 per cent. profit.

Here is the list of officers and directors: J. B. De Beltrand, president; Caspar W. Rieman, Jr., first vice-president; Louis C. Vossmeyer, second vice-president; Justus von Lengerke, third vice-president; C. L. Johnston, secretary and treasurer; Wm. F. Rothlisberger, director, formerly manager Ward Baking Co., Ampere, N. J.; Julius Brenzinger, director, vice-president Max Ams Machine Co., Bridgeport, Conn.; Charles F. Krayl, director, wholesale and retail hardware, Newark, N. J.; W. L. Sweet, Jr., director, W. L. Sweet & Co., New York City.

There is nothing whatever new about this enterprise, except the fact that no bulk goods are to be sold. There is no reason why it should not succeed, if properly managed, for the chain-store idea, when intelligently conducted, has invariably succeeded. Whether it will be a good investment for consumers, however, is another matter. So far as the sale of advertised specialties is concerned, it introduces no new factor into the situation. Obviously the All Package Co. cannot sell package goods any cheaper than stores now in the business, and when it comes to introduce its private brands, out of which it expects to make the most of its money, it will find its own troubles cut out for it. As to the mail-order end of the thing, we don't believe that the trade generally have much reason to be afraid of that. The concern cannot afford to sell advertised goods by mail at any very deeply cut price, if it sells them alone. There are no bulk goods in this scheme to make up losses out of, so that the package goods must stand on their own feet. This very largely draws the sting from the competition.

Enclosed find check for which kindly extend our subscription to "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" for another two years. We are getting more than our money's worth; we certainly would dislike to drop it.—W. D. Schealer & Son, Boyertown, Pa.

Change in Well-known Advertising Agency.

Announcement of an important change in the Mahin Advertising Co, of Chicago, Ill., was made yesterday. John Lee Mahin, founder of the company, has sold his interests to William H. Rankin, and retires at once from the presidency of the organization. Mr. Rankin, the new president of the company, has been vice-president of it during the past seven years. He came to Chicago in 1907 to assume the Western management of the Street Railways Advertising Co., under Mr. Thomas Balmer, who is now in England. He has a wide reputation as an advertising man of progressive ideas and unusual experience.

The New York Letter

ost Remarkable Food Bill Ever Introduced is Now Being Considered by New York Legislature. State Begins Prosecution of Armour & Co. for Not Putting Package Weight on Hams and Bacon. State Campaign Against Low Grade Salad Oils. Market Summary.

cial Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, March 3, 1916.

There is much speculation among trade here over a new food bill ich the New York Legislature is w considering. It is a bill which uld require the placing of date of packing upon canned ods. This is the old bugbear ich comes up regularly every ar, but it, up to this time, has ver become a law in any State. ie bill is the most radical piece proposed legislation which has er appeared in this country, beuse it confiscates all canned goods er they are two years old and phibits their sale and compels the anufacturer to redeem them in w goods.

Such a radical bill it is generally lieved could never pass, but if it l pass would be declared uncontutional. The bill applies to all rmetically sealed canned or prerved fruits, vegetables or other ticles of food except canned or ndensed milk. In addition to the te of packing, the can must bear label indicating the quality, name, dress and place of business of the cker or of the wholesale dealer. must also bear the place of packg. If the goods are soaked goods te word "soaked" must appear on te label in letters at least a half ich high and ¾ inch wide. No reign canned goods are subject to ie act.

The penalty is $50 fine in case of retailer and $500 in case of a jobr. There is a proviso that nothing this section shall apply to hereetically sealed or canned or prerved foods which are labeled in ccordance with the provisions of ie agricultural law and also with ie provisions of the Act of Conress, June 30, 1906, relating to isbranded and adulterated foods. obody seems to be seriously execting the bill to pass.

The State Superintendent of Weights and Measures, John J. arrell, has announced that he is waging a campaign against manufacturers of cheaper grades of salad oil, many of whom, he says, are giving the public short weight. The matter, according to the Superintendent, is so serious that he refers to it as a conspiracy between the manufacturers of low grades of salad oil and manufacturers of cans. He says it is due to the high price of cottonseed oil.

Several small can manufacturers are believed to be implicated and the plants of one of these has already been visited and several hundred short weight cans destroyed.

* * *

The city court at Yonkers on Thursday last found Armour & Co. guilty of violating the law which requires a statement of the net weight of the contents to be made on all cased hams and bacon. Readers hereof will remember that this is a question which has been debated between the packers and the State authorities for several months. Packers say that cased hams and bacon are not package goods, and therefore the weight need not be stated upon the label. The State authorities differ and are bringing cases against the packers, of which this is the first. The testimony showed that the wrappings cost the packers less than 5 cents a pound, but were weighed in with the ham at 18 cents. New York is one of the few States which believe that hams and bacon are package goods. The United States Government sometime ago ruled that they were not, although it will hold a meeting on Wednesday next, March 8th, to consider the question again.

The case brought in Yonkers will be considered a test case.

The information that Mr. George Willard Hopkins, formerly general sales and advertising manager for the Loose-Wiles Biscuit Co., has resigned his connection with this organization, will probably prove a great surprise to everybody who knows him.

They say every man's place can be filled, but it would seem tremendously difficult to replace Mr. Hopkins.

WRIGLEY'S spear—the sign of the perfect gum in the perfect package—has pointed a way of happiness to millions of people; not only those who have bought and enjoyed the best chewing gum made—but those who have sold it—the Retail Merchants.

The wonderful WRIGLEY distribution—so complete that any person in any corner of the United States has but to step into the nearest store to find WRIGLEY'S SPEARMINT or WRIGLEY'S DOUBLEMINT—is convincing proof of the necessity and value of dealer co-operation—without which, one of the heaviest advertising expenditures in the world would fail to secure maximum results.

Through the Pennsylvania Plan we hope to show the merchants of Pennsylvania not only that we believe in them, but that real co-operation between manufacturer and merchant means better stores, increased sales and greater profits.

Don't forget that the more prominently you display it, the more benefits and profits you will get from this most widely advertised product in the world.

Each package has a United Profit-Sharing Coupon for the consumer and each box has a 5-Coupon Certificate for you, Mr. Dealer

Mr. Hopkins started with Chase & Sanborn, tea and coffee importers of Boston. From there he became general manager of the Johnson Educator Food Co., of Boston. He left there to become specialty manager for the Loose-Wiles Biscuit Co., and was later appointed general sales and advertising manager. Two years ago he was elected vice president and director of that company which offices he has held in connection with his position of sales and advertising manager, up to the time of his resignation, which took effect February 1st.

Mr. Hopkins is a very unusual man. He is an attorney-at-law, having been admitted to the bar after working his way through college under very adverse conditions. He has a remarkably winning personality and is the man for whom the word "poise" was invented as it is a practical impossibility, no matter how many important things come to him at once, to upset his equanimity. He is a genial, self-contained gentleman at all times and we wish him all the good things that come to man.

We are informed that to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation on the Board of Directors of W. I. Yerkes of Thomas Cusack Co., chairman of the Greater New York Committee, the Board of Directors has appointed George W. Hopkins.

Summarized Market Conditions.

Tea quiet, low grade blacks very strong. War insurance and freight still very high.—Coffee unchanged. Rio and Santos steady to firm, but demand small. Milds steady and moderately active.—Sugar very strong and firm. Raws quoted at as high as 5.27 and all refiners quoting granulated at 6.35. Beet granulated has advanced to 6.25.—Currants scarce on pressure to sell. Prunes developed some slight strength but no important change. Raisins firm. Other dried fruits unchanged.—Canned tomatoes steady and unchanged at the recent decline. Demand light.—Peas and corn extremely active at unchanged prices.—Salmon strong and active. Domestic sardines firm.—Wheat unsettled and weaker. Flour about 25 cents per barrel lower for the week.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

On February 22d Mr. Smedley addressed the Freeport Business Men's Association at a special meeting held in the new Odd Fellows' Temple. Practically all the business and professional men of the town were present when President O. J. Saver called the meeting to order. E. O. Spotts, secretary of the Tarentum Association, made a brief talk outlining the work of that organization and suggesting matters that could ccomplished by the Freeport Asso-ion. At the conclusion of Mr. dley's address brief speeches were e by the town Burgess and other bers. Lunch was provided and a ral good time indulged in. Free-is a thriving town and its business

Country Dealers Who Sh Eggs to Large Markets, Read This.

Government Says That If Eggs Shipp in Interstate Commerce Conte More Than a Certain Percent Bad Ones, They Will be Consider Adulterated.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merch and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
March 3, 1916.

The Department of Agricultu has had under consideration f some time the application of t Federal Food and Drugs Act to shipment in interstate commerce eggs in the shell, especially the tw classes of eggs known in the tra as "current receipts" and as "r jects" from candling rooms. "Cu rent receipts" contain at differe seasons of the year varying propo tions of eggs which are filthy, d composed or putrid. "Reject from candling rooms, as a rule, co tain large proportions of eggs whi are filthy, decomposed or putr and very small proportions of eg suitable for consumption.

Under the Federal Food a Drugs Act, eggs, in common wi other articles of food, are adulte ated if they consist wholly or part of a filthy, decomposed or pu rid substance. Section 2 of the a prohibits the shipment in inters commerce of foods which are a terated and it is plain that this pr hibition applies to the shipment interstate commerce of "current r ceipts" or of "rejects" from can ling rooms or of any other grade eggs in the shell unless the filt decomposed or putrid eggs ha been removed.

In the opinion of the Departm eggs which contain yolks stuc the shell, moldy eggs, black spo mixed rots, addled eggs, black ro and any other eggs which cons wholly or in part of a filthy, deco posed or putrid substance are ad terated.

The investigations of the Depa ment have shown that it is co mercially practicable, by the meth of candling, to eliminate from a given shipment most of the eggs the kinds which the Departm regards as adulterated. It is n practice of the Department, ever, to base proceedings under Food and Drugs Act on ship- ts of eggs unless there are pres- larger percentages of bad eggs t are ordinarily present in rec- zed commercial grades of lled eggs. The Department is rmed that cases of eggs are not allowed to receive even the lowest candled egg grades if the cases contain more than one and one-half dozen or 5 per cent. of bad eggs. Country shippers who are not certain of the freshness of their eggs should candle them before shipping them in interstate commerce.

HOLT.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

he tea market is still reported ve, with everything steady to t. About the only change for week is in low-grade blacks, ch are probably a cent higher in mpathy with Ceylon-Indias. The nsumptive demand for tea is d.

Coffee.

There has been no change in ee during the week. Rio and tos are still maintained at the ance noted last week and the k before. The Brazilian situ- n is stronger and there is also etter demand reported for do- tic purposes. No important nge in Brazils appears in sight. ds are firm in sympathy with zils and also on account of some ree of scarcity. Java and Mocha about unchanged, Java being y firm and high and Mocha still ined to be easy.

Sugar.

The sugar market has been con- erably excited during the week. R vs have advanced until at the sc of the week 5.27 was asked them. Refined sugar also ad- ced until at the week's close refiners are asking 6.35. The look for the moment is very ong. Available stocks of raw ar are in strong hands, which i undoubtedly manipulate the rket. The consumptive demand f sugar is very fair.

Fish.

All grades of mackerel are steady d firm at about unchanged prices f the week. The pre-Lenten de- nd is not making much impres- n. Cod, hake and haddock are changed and quiet. Salmon is w ted and most holders report a g d demand. Prices are un- c nged. Domestic sardines are st l firm, but in comparatively light request. There are no French sardines coming over at all and first hands holders report very light holdings, but stocks in retailers' hands will probably be sufficient at the very high prices now ruling to carry the trade until summer. Portuguese sardines, which are a sort of substitute for French, are also exceedingly scarce, but retailers are holding some and they will very likely last until at least the middle of summer. A considerable number of retailers also have a stock of Norwegian smoked sardines, but the stock in the hands of importers is very light. Prices are about 25 per cent. above normal.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is 10 points off for the week. Compound syrup in seasonable demand at ruling quotations. Sugar syrup very high but not much wanted except for manufacturing. Molasses unchanged and in fair demand.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes show no change whatever. The demand is seasonable and fair. Peaches and apricots unchanged and quiet, peaches being cheap and apricots firm. Raisins, currants, dates and other dried fruits are exactly where they were a week ago.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are working off a little and are perhaps 10 cents per bushel cheaper than a week ago. Marrows are about where they were a week ago. The weather has not been favorable for the consumption of beans, and the situation is at the moment a little weak. California limas are unchanged and dull.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes show no change for the week and very light demand. The statistical position is no weaker than it has been for several months. Corn and peas are unchanged, both spot and future. There is a fair demand for both. Apples are dull and unchanged. California canned goods are steady to firm on account of broken assortments; prices unchanged everywhere. Small Eastern staple canned goods show no change and seasonable demand.

Butter.

The receipts of fresh butter are very light and the market is firm at prices ranging the same as a week ago with a good consumptive demand. The stocks of storage butter are being rapidly reduced, and the market is likely to remain in a firm condition. If there is any change it is likely to be a slight advance.

Cheese.

The market on full cream cheese is steady at unchanged prices, with a light consumptive demand. Stocks are reported to be light and the market is in a healthy condition. No change is likely to occur during the coming week.

Eggs.

The egg market is firm at about 3 cents per dozen more than a week ago. With a decrease in the receipts and an increase in the consumption, eggs have been cleaned up on arrival each day. The weather just now is good for production of eggs, and there are likely to be increased receipts in the near future with possible decline in price.

Provisions.

Everything in the smoked meat line is steady at unchanged prices. Pure and compound lard are slow sale at prices ranging the same as last week. Dried beef, barreled pork and canned meats are dull at unchanged prices with a light demand.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

The evaporated apple market is very quiet here and without material change.

The export movement is at almost a complete standstill, but the lower asking prices are bringing a better domestic trade.

Strictly prime stock is quotable at 5 to 5¼ cents per pound, with choice at 5¾ to 6 cents, both in 50-pound boxes.

There is no particular interest shown by speculators, although they pick up an occasional car here and there to put into cold storage.

Raspberries are scarce, and are selling in a small way at from 26 to 27 cents per pound, in barrels.

C. C. HALL.

Rochester, N. Y.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Both the cold weather and the approaching Lent have helped the salt fish business rather materially, and the decidedly better demand for Norway mackerel which we reported last week still continues, and at the rate at which Norway mackerel are selling just now, it will not be long before stocks in first hands will be entirely cleared.

Norway herrings, in spite of their high price, continue to sell in a regular hand-to-mouth way, but both Scotch and Holland herrings are bought by the trade reluctantly on account of the prevailing extraordinarily high prices. Besides, American herrings have been selling to a very large extent where formerly both Holland and Scotch were sold only. This scarcity of both Scotch and Holland herrings and the high prices at which they are being held from necessity, will prove undoubtedly of lasting benefit to the American herrings. The trade has gotten accustomed to handle these goods now in a larger way than usual, and supplement the foreign goods with American fish, and while, of course, lots of Holland and Scotch herrings will be imported again when normal conditions return, some of this trade will be retained by the American product, and probably a big lot of it.

There has been absolutely no improvement in the imported sardine situation, as practically no shipments have arrived from Portugal, where there is no catch at the present time. Naturally, nothing has come from France, as they have but very little themselves of sardines, and shipments from Norway of sardines have never been as small for the simple reason that the prices which prevail there for smoked sardines are so enormous that it would be folly on the part of the American importer to pay the present prices and import the goods, because we could not sell them. It is a peculiar fact that the American trade will continue to sell goods which have been bought at low prices at the same low prices as they did until their stock is entirely exhausted, no matter how much the market may have advanced. This is the case in Norwegian sardine There are still instances where one fin sardines being offered at 25 and mo per cent. lower than they would co to import to-day. Naturally, owing the exorbitantly high prices of Norw sardines, the demand has suffered ve materially, and naturally, as import we have suffered accordingly, as we a unable to import these goods at a pri at which we can sell them to our trad We shall have to wait until the catch sardines in Norway improves very m terially, or until the nations now war have eaten enough sardines, so to turn to some other food product f a change.

TO THE TRADE—No. 2

Take as a basis the best product of its kind and make it by advertising the most popular product of its kind, and you have offered the grocer something on which he can build a growing and profitable business, provided the product carries a legitimate profit margin.

THE ADVERTISING. The Clicquot Club Company alone of the many manufacturers of ginger ale has seen the possibilities of grocers' sales of this line in a big enough way to back up their product with an efficient national and local advertising campaign, and thus make sure of eager and ready acceptance of their line when the merchant offers it to his customers.

In 1916 seven big, brilliant full pages in the Saturday Evening Post from April to August. Ten conspicuous insertions in Collier's Weekly. Nine great advertisements in the Literary Digest. Ten dominating insertions in Life, and added to all these from 20 to 26 beautiful and conspicuous advertisements in about 400 important daily newspapers, including some of the most prominent metropolitan dailies, and for good measure —street car and poster advertising in many places.

This is a big campaign but it is an economical one, because it helps to move an enormous production and because it makes it easy for any dealer anywhere to sell Clicquot Club Ginger Ale. Just let your trade know that you have it and it will sell itself.

"Modern Merchant and Grocery World" Makes Compilation of Products for Which Demand is Being Created Through Leading Periodicals. Papers and Magazines Used as Basis Cover Entire Country.

[The compilation which appears below is the result of more thinking along a line which was given some discussion several months ago, viz., the advantage to the retailer of keeping posted as to what products are being advertised to his customers, so that he may get the benefit of such advertising, if the product is for other reasons a desirable one to sell. The list here presented includes practically every leading magazine and periodical, and products that are not advertised in at least some of them are hardly advertised in this way at all, although they may be in newspapers or in direct ways, such as sampling, demonstrating, etc.]

A Medicine Scheme.

Buena Vista., Pa., Feb. 29, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—As a matter of information, please let me know through your paper as early as possible if the Dill Medicine Co. sell their goods through canvassers from house to house? I understand they do. They sell to the grocery stores and then sell below cost to the housewife, so I am told, and give them three months to pay for goods, then expect the merchant to take their goods and keep them on the shelf. This is unfair.

Thanking you in advance for the favor, as I would like to know.

Respectfully,
SUBSCRIBER.

We have made inquiries and have found no evidence at all that the Dill concern is doing such a foolish thing. If it is, it certainly deserves to be boycotted by every retailer in the business.

Organizing a Grocers' Association.

Newark, N. J., March 3, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—One or two grocers have asked us to give them the information on the procedure for local retail organizations. We remember reading something along this line in a back number of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," and we have looked through our files in vain and we cannot find the issue in question.

We are under the impression that in this article you gave a pretty good plan for the local club. Could you find us a copy and mail it? Or if you have any printed plans for local organizations to follow we will be very glad to forward them.

Send us the bill for the troub we put you to and for the wante issue. Very truly yours,
AMERICAN GROCERS' SOCIETY, IN

We have published a great de of matter regarding grocers' ass ciations, organizing methods, and on, but cannot think of any speci issue. We have accordingly a vised this correspondent to get touch with Secretary Reno Schoc of the Philadelphia Retail Grocer Association.

Cold Weather Specialties

Fresh Sausage, Scrapple, Souse, Liver Pudding

Burk's Fresh Sausage

Composed entirely of selected tender pieces of pork, not the ordinary trimmings commonly used. Not cheapened in price and quality by the addition of tripe, boiled rice and sundry substitutes. Correctly seasoned, not offensive to sensitive stomachs because of pungent herbs. Nutritious. In four styles—hashed fine and coarse, linked and in straight casings.

Burk's Philadelphia Scrapple

Prepared from the very best materials—good, wholesome meats and extra fine corn meal. Well boiled and seasoned to suit the most critical. Not to be compared with some cheap products of doubtful hues and colors. Burk's eats as good as it looks. Superior to farmers' products. In pans of 15 pounds each.

Burk's Pig Souse

is a seasonable specialty prepared fresh daily, in pans of five pounds each. The jelly is clear and transparent and free from vegetable gelatines and ill-smelling glue stock. Contains plenty of meat and garnished with slices of lemon and parsley.

Proves attractive when turned out of the pan, and is a quick seller, saving the consumer the trouble of cooking pig's feet, so difficult to obtain at this season of the year.

Burk's Liver Pudding

Of the usual "Burk" standard—clean and unadulterated. Rich in quality and an excellent dish when fried, or, after removing the casing, hashed with potatoes. In rings of 1 pound each.

What's the Right of This?

Minersville, Pa., Feb. 24, 1916.

To "The Stroller."

Dear Sir:—I like your articles in the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World." Sometimes I cannot subscribe to all that you say. In the last issue of the paper your article on mixing politics with business is very true, and I heartily indorse it, but in reference to a man having the courage of his convictions, you make a very strong statement. Are we to understand that when a man goes into business he loses his identity or individuality? Suppose an issue is presented in the community in which a moral and State law is being violated, should a merchant take the side of right and uphold the law or should he leave it go by default? For a great many years I have had convictions that certain things were wrong and have tried to better them, and am still in business and am enjoying a measure of success.

Wishing you success in your work, I am,

Sincerely yours,

ARTHUR JONES.

Well, brother, I'll tell you.

It depends on the fellow and what he does, and how he does it. That's the whole thing in a nutshell. When it comes to voting, there ain't any check on a fellow at all. It's a secret business, voting is, and he can do as he blame pleases.

But when it comes to jumping in and campaigning—working for things—why that's different.

It's different because in this world there's a lot of cheap, mean little people who can't see that a chap can go against 'em in politics and still sell 'em good groceries.

The only way they can get back at a man for going against 'em in politics is to take their trade from him and a lot of the mean little skeezicks will do that.

If he ain't depending on his business for his living, all right—let him come right out in the open and talk as loud as he likes. But if he is depending on his business for his living, can he afford always to talk as loud as he wants to, and is he a coward when he don't do it? Listen here.

I've got a customer who's got his views about this—I wish I could get him to write 'em in. Last fall he got into a fight over electing a school director or something like that. Two chaps were candidates, one was a preacher that had been a school teacher and the other a young sport lawyer. The lawyer's father was a big shoe manufacturer in the town, with a big house and a big family—good buyer. There was some other married sons, too, all good buyers, and the whole bunch dealt with my friend.

There was a big fight over the measly little office. The shoe manufacturer wanted to push his boy to the front, but the boy was a high flyer and boozer—there was a lot of talk about him and a married woman—he didn't have much sense, either—and a lot of the best people in the place were out against him. This customer of mine was among 'em; between you and me he was one of the hottest of the lot. Consequence was, the preacher got in and the lawyer got licked.

Twenty-four hours after the election the shoe manufacturer and all of his family stopped dealing with my friend and they don't even speak to him on the street now.

He told me that little thing cost him about $70 a week. Of course that ain't breaking his back, but it was good trade and he didn't want to lose it.

You see, Brother Jones, the trouble is that you don't get any new trade by doing things like that. Nobody comes to you and says, "Here, I like the way you stood up for this or for that; I'm going to trade with you after this." People ain't built that way. The only thing you do is to lose. If you can afford to lose, all right. Go to it. But if you can't, why the way I look at it is that you just have to lay low.

You have to take people as they are, especially when you're getting your living out of 'em.

Now don't get me wrong. I don't mean that a business man has to sell out. If he votes for a crook, that he knows is a crook, just to hold somebody's trade, then he's a dog, and I'll tell him he's one to his face, even if I lose his trade.

But I hope, if he's a customer of mine, that nobody'll tell me about it, so I won't have to tell him. Is that being a coward? Shut up, it ain't either! As long as everybody's trade is his own and he can give it where he likes, and as long as you need it, why you simply have to see that you don't do any more than you have to, to make him take it away. Ain't that right now, Brother Jones?

Making enemies, that's the thing. The only enemy a business man can afford to make is the dead beat that he wouldn't sell to if he come to the store. Go as far as you like with people like that, but unless he's in a peach of a situation, he can't afford to make enemies of the people he depends on for his living. It's all right to work for the good of the town—fine—but if working for the good of the town gets you in wrong with the people whose trade you've got to have, will the town step in and support you? Sure it will—it has a place all ready for you. They call it the poorhouse.

Look at These Shelves

Here is a store fitted with Baines' Brackets. Our word for it, there are at least 25 per cent. more goods on the shelves here than there can possibly be on the shelves of any similar store using the old style shelves. No crowding either.

The point about Baines' Brackets is that they hold up the shelves without uprights. That gives you the use of the whole unobstructed shelf length, and not only greatly improves the appearance of your stock, but gives you a place for at least one-fourth more goods.
